

Much for Love

By NARD JONES

CHAPTER IV

grew suddenly whiter than before. "Peter, you can't believe that, stricken speech for a moment. "Oh, Peter, you believe that? You can't go away and spoil everything we planned."

He touched her arm. "Of course not, silly Helena. I've wanted to see Courtney anyhow. Should see him Monday, as a matter of fact. But it looks as if I'll be in bed here for a few days, so I want him over."

He looked up at Helena. "You'll long distance him? Right away?"

"Of course, Peter. Whatever you want."

"And..." he seemed to hesitate just the fraction of a second. "Tell him to bring Leah with him." Peter smiled. "You see, Leah is a friend of his. She may as well enjoy him as he will make the trip—he might as well have a companion. Will you do that for me, Helena?"

Helena nodded. "Right away, Peter. And now you rest. If you want me again, I'll be in the next room." She bent over to kiss him. His arms went around her, holding her desperately. "Poor little Helena," he whispered queerly. "I'm—I'm afraid I've brought you a lot of trouble. But I'll try to make it right."

"Of course you'll make it right, Peter." Gently she withdrew from his arms, returned his kiss. Then with uncertain steps she found her way into the big main room where every eye watched her entrance.

"Peter wants me to make a long distance call," she said. "He—he seems to be all right."

Fain Sutter turned from the window. "There's a car coming up the road. It looks like Blair and the doctor, too!"

Glad for the slightest excuse to break their vigil, the others crowded to the window—but Helena, mindful of Peter's orders, went into the hallway where the telephone was connected. It was a matter of only a few moments until she was listening to the clear, well-modulated voice of John Courtney.

"Yes, I'm Peter Henderson's attorney... What's up now?"

"Mr. Henderson is at Crest Mountain Lodge. He—he's been injured, and won't be able to get away for a few days. He wants you to take the plane immediately."

"Injured? The plane?" repeated Courtney's startled voice.

"And he asked me to say that you should bring Leah along."

There was a silence at the other end of the wire. Then: "Yes, yes. Who is this speaking?"

"I'm... Mrs. Peter Henderson."

Helena said. How queer it sounded! "Mrs. Peter Henderson?" exclaimed Courtney. "Good God! I'll be there. I'll take the next plane."
