PRINCIPLE OF THE THING

It is a little bit easier to understand the British furor over the Simpson affair—almost incomprehensible to most Americans—by glancing at an article written for the New York Times by Harold J. Laaki, professor of political science at the University of London.

The great principle involved, says Professor Laaki, is independent of the personality of the king, of Mrs. Simpson, or of Stanley Baldwin. It is, simply, "the principle that out of this issue no precedent must be created that makes the royal authority once more a source of independent political power in the state."

Looked at from that angle, the uproar is easier to understand. Great Britain is a democracy. The very cornerstone of its democratic institutions is the fact that the king reigns, but does not rule.

He must be bound by the advice of his ministers. Those who oppose him in the Simpson case doubtless feel that to let him override his cabinet in this instance might pave the way for an extremely undesirable abuse of the royal power later on.

VBE HE'S RIGHT

WHEN that "modern Noah" of Olympia, Wash., built himself an ark and predicted that the world would come to an end in 1932, a lot of people sneered. For some reason the catastrophe failed to come off, but this didn't daunt the prophetic gentleman. He is just as convinced, now, that the deluge is due in 1938.

This should be the signal for a thunderous burst of hilarity from coast to coast, but somehow it has failed to show up. This, of course, might be indifference; or could it be that so many "unhappenable" things have happened that people are beginning to wonder if he is right?

Schmelling's conquest of Lewis, for instance; the defeat of Minnesota by Northwestern, that overwhelming Roosevelt landslide—and, topping it all—King Edward's surrender of a British crown for an American divorce. Where's that telegraph blimp? We must reserve a stateroom on the Olympia ark.

DENTAL PSYCHOLOGY

FEW businesses, probably, encounter as much sales resistance as the profession of dentistry. It is almost as easy to sell a refrigerator to an Eskimo as to lure certain patients who need dental attention to a dentist's office.

Now comes Dr. Louis R. Hill, Los Angeles dentist-lecturer, with some suggestions to his fellow professionals. Addressing 800 colleagues in Cleveland, he advised, among other things, that they abandon the words "extract" and "grind" as fear-inspiring, and substitute "remove" and "smooth." Also, that each of them should practice smiling before a mirror. A smile, Dr. Hill believes, helps quiet a patient's alarm.

This, of course, may be all to the good. But if a patient has a morbid fear of drill and forceps, we wonder whether it would still his quail if his dentist, with a Cheshire grin, inquired, "How about a little removing and smoothing today?"

HE FOUND OUT

BY now, the barbaric details of the Ethiopian and Spanish affairs must pretty well have disillusioned young Americans who had believed that war was crammed with romance and glamour. A 24-year-old Bronx barber, Vincent Patriarca, however, got his lesson the hard way.

Spurred by patriotism and his enthusiasm for aviation, young Patriarca deserted his comb and shears, went overseas, enlisted, and flew with the Spanish rebels. For a time thrilling, exciting war met his every expectation. But his plane was downed over Madrid, and he was taken prisoner. Then it was that certainty of death before a firing squad brought him face to face with grim reality.

Luckily, the state department effected his release, and he sped back to his Bronx barber shop. But any young man whose pulse stirs at the mention of war would do well to write Mr. Patriarca and get the real lowdown.

WHAT OTHER EDITORS THINK

ONE job for the 1937 Oregon legislature to do will be to undo a job that was done by the previous legislature which inserted into the drunken driving law the requirement that arresting police call physicians to examine suspects. Attention to the law was called at the recent sheriff's association convention.

The law as it now stands is consistent in that it makes it obligatory for the police to call the physician and does not place any obligation upon the physician. Nor could it without making provision for payment of fees, or without creating an office to be held by a physician whose duty it would be to act in such cases. No law could compel a doctor to donate his services any more than it could force a grocer to furnish provisions free of charge to prisoners in the county jail.

Consequently comparatively few convictions are obtainable under the Oregon law, and it is a wonder that there are any at all. The majority who do receive sentences on this charge are those who plead guilty. The rest, as a rule, are brought up under reckless driving or some similar charge.

Then there is another angle to the medical examination requirement. A driver might be arrested at a remote point, or there might be for other reasons some lapse of time between that of the arrest and examination. Doctors, you know, don't enjoy being dragged out of bed in the early morning hours to work for nothing any more than would anyone else.

If a drunken driver is given an hour or so to collect his wits he might be able to spher up sufficiently to warrant an honest opinion that he was not guilty as charged. The physician can only pass upon the case as he sees it.

Drunken driving is a growing menace, even though the number of drunken drivers may not increase. Automobile construction and highway construction both are constantly inviting greater speed to traffic. This places a constantly growing responsibility upon drivers. To control a racing car the driver must be in full possession of his faculties. He must be able to think quickly and to act quickly, and his hand must be steady or his car is likely to meet disaster, involving, perhaps, others beside himself.

To be thus equipped a driver must be perfectly sober. A mild jag that would have caused no trouble a few years ago might be fatal today.

No it is that the drunken driver should be driven from the highways. This cannot be done if there is an inadequate law any more than if there is an adequate law.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By RODNEY DUTCHER

Register-Guard Washington Correspondent
 WASHINGTON, Dec. 26.—The 75th Congress, which meets Jan. 5, and President Roosevelt, who will be inaugurated Jan. 20, will take office under the impetus of a "mandate" backed by a plurality of 11,000,000 votes. So what?

It will be difficult for this Congress to avoid making history—even if it tries. For one thing, this will be the first time a president and a new Congress ever have come into office within three months of election time. The Norris "lame duck" amendment to the Constitution is now fully operative, and now may be tested the theory that popular government is best attained when the federal elective officers come fresh from victory at the polls to take their seats.

Never before has one political party dominated both House and Senate so overwhelmingly as will the so-called Democratic party in the next two years. If the president is to have effective opposition, it must come from Democratic ranks.

It seems a preposterous idea that any piece of legislation might pass against Roosevelt's wishes. It is likely—but far from certain—that Roosevelt can have from Congress whatever he demands.

Important Issues Faced
 Roosevelt and congressional leaders are in buddies as this is written. But the administration's legislative program will be developed gradually as the session progresses, rather than all at once.

Measures to restrict the U. S. Supreme Court's veto power over the legislative and executive branches of government, wage and hour legislation, federal housing subsidies, relief expenditures and budget-balancing, neutrality, crop insurance and farm tenancy, government reorganization—all those issues will be prominently before Congress.

The safest prediction is that this session will be extremely busy and that it will not be short. To be settled at the outset is a bitter contest for the majority leadership of the House between Sam Rayburn of Texas and John J. O'Connor of New York. Speaker William A. Bankhead of Alabama will be chosen again without opposition.

Roosevelt has announced flatly that he is taking no part in this battle, but so many of his confidantes and liaison men are working for Rayburn that if O'Connor, a Tammany man, is chosen, insiders will construe his victory as a licking for the administration and a portent of trouble ahead.

There will be only 17 Republicans in the Senate, several of them notoriously independent in speech and vote, among 66 members. And only 80 Republicans among the 435 members of the House.

House Majority "Unwieldy"
 Old-timers say they'd rather try to control a House with a majority of only 10 or a dozen than one with a majority of a hundred. It is recalled that Roosevelt's first real troubles with Congress began soon after the Democratic landslide of 1934. Some fear that this Congress may break up into blocs difficult to control.

Senate leadership will remain the same—Joe Robinson of Arkansas as floor leader, Pat Harrison of Mississippi as whip, and Charlie McNary of Oregon titular leader of the small Republican minority.

Vanderburg of Michigan is expected to be the outstanding Republican spokesman and will have as much as anyone to do with shaping programs which Republicans hope to formulate for use in the campaigns of 1938 and 1940.

The minority leader on the House side will again be Congressman Bert Snell of New York. The 75th Congress will be more liberal than the 74th, especially if you count in an increased number of those who profess to be strong New Dealers. But there is little chance that Townsendites, Coughlinites, or other inflationists will throw monkey wrenches into the wheels.

Several Powers Expire
 First executive powers to expire by limitation are the authority to devalue the dollar and use devaluation "profit" of $2,000,000,000 as a stabilization fund. Roosevelt wants both these extended beyond January 30.

Other powers or agencies expiring are: Lending power of RFC and of Electric Home and Farm Authority, Feb. 1; use of government securities for Federal Reserve notes, March 3; appropriations for CCC, March 31; Federal Housing Authority modernization loans, April 1; Neutrality Act, May 1; State Department's authority to negotiate trade agreements, June 12; prohibition of interstate shipment of oil above quota, June 18; three-cent letter rate and various excise or "nuisance" taxes, WPA, PWA and Resettlement Administration, June 30.

Under a joker in the first deficiency bill of 1936, most of the emergency agencies will die at the end of this fiscal year unless continued by special act. (Copyright, 1936, NEA Service, Inc.)

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHER

Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

DURING the World War, trench mouth was common among the troops in France. Nearly 20 years have passed since the United States entered the war. Today, the condition is found frequently among Americans. It is no longer called trench mouth, however, but is described as Vincent's infection, because the organism which causes it first was discovered by a French doctor named Vincent.

In this condition, the membranes of the mouth are red, inflamed, and swollen, and sometimes are covered by a yellowish-gray material which is adherent. When this material is removed, a bleeding surface is revealed. The material will be found also in the spaces between the teeth, and as a result, the gums bleed easily. There is a foul, putrescent odor associated with this material.

Since the mouth and gums also are infected and irritated in cases of scurvy, diabetes, lead or bismuth poisoning, or occasionally in syphilis, the doctor must determine definitely that the condition is Vincent's infection, or Vincent's angina, before undertaking treatment.

The victim of this infection may spread it to other people by kissing, or by contaminating eating utensils and drinking cups. The disease sometimes is contracted in the offices of careless or poorly trained dentists.

To avoid it, one must take constant care of the mouth, teeth, and gums. The first signs are persistent bleeding of the gums and unpleasant odor. Whenever these symptoms appear, consult a competent dentist at once, because control of the infection is much easier in the early stages than when it has become chronic. Incidentally, Vincent's infection, as well as other infections of the mouth, affects those with bad teeth and neglected mouths much more frequently than it does those who keep their mouths in a good, hygienic condition.

Regular, competent attention to the teeth and gums prevents such infections. Removal of deposits around the teeth and proper attention to the cavities and crevices make it difficult for the germs to grow around the teeth and in the gums.

It has been found that a drug called sodium perborate has a definite effect in destroying the germs of Vincent's infection, and other mouth ailments. A victim of Vincent's infection, therefore, may use a preparation of perborate as a gargle or as a mouthwash and, in addition, apply it frequently in proper concentration directly to the infected gums and tissue.

The dentist or physician will treat the infection by direct application of proper medication, including not only sodium perborate but also other antiseptics, which are applied directly to the spaces between the teeth and held in contact with the infected areas so as to destroy the germs.

There occasionally are severe cases which require vigorous treatment over long periods of time, and the use not only of sodium perborate and hydrogen dioxide but occasionally of drugs that have to be injected into the body for their systemic reaction.

Waldport News

WALDPOR, Dec. 25.—(Special)—The car of Dr. Gill Edwards, who was accompanied by Dr. R. W. Lloyd, overturned near Fall Creek last Sunday, when the mechanism of the steering gear failed to function. Neither man was more than bruised up. The car was hauled back to Waldport by McMillin's tow car.

Miss Helen Morris, Bill Hunter, Gordon Pruitt, and Lynn Everson returned from Oregon State college for the holidays.

Miss Ann Morris is home for the Christmas holidays from Crow, where she has been teaching.
