AN EX-DICTATOR LOST IN MYSTERY

REPORTS, later denied, that Bela Kun, Soviet dictator of Hungary for five months in 1919, had been executed in Russia, leave this strange character still in the depths of mystery. A former tailor, he gained control of an ailing country and bled it for the short time he was in power.

Bela Kun, ambitious young Hungarian, was taken prisoner by the Russians during the World War. He entered into the revolution there, and soon after the war returned to Budapest. He led a revolt, was caught and imprisoned, but later gained control of the government when the Karolyi regime fell.

His was a reign of plunder and terror. It lasted from March to August, 1919. Then the peasants revolted, he fled to Austria and was permitted to go on to Russia. When in 1928 he returned to Vienna, he was arrested, but he escaped conviction and is believed to have returned to Russia. Since then his life has been a mystery.

Today his memory is retained by the series of inartistic stamps he issued while Hungarian dictator in honor of five noted Communists. One is shown here.
