Cooking School Is Sponsored By Wards

Montgomery Ward and company is sponsoring a cooking school at the store in Eugene this week, starting Tuesday, it was announced. In charge of the school is Howard K. Trent, who will demonstrate modern pressure cookery during the school.

The demonstrations will be held at 2 o'clock each day in the furniture department. At times when pounds may mean life or death—when health may mean the welfare of an entire company of men—things to eat and the manner in which they are prepared are of supreme importance.

In organizing his antartec expedition, Commander Richard R. Byrd realized the importance of obtaining the finest of food for his men and the more important feature of having this food prepared in such a manner that the greatest amount of health values and appetizing flavor were retained through the cooking process. Faced with this problem, he gave much serious thought to selecting foods and cooking processes. At the conclusion of his studies he selected the pressure cooker system of preparing the foods.
