OSBORNE'S BALANCE OF POWER

Coupled with his emphatic denunciation of the CIO, the Commonwealth Federation and all similar left wing movements, State Secretary Ben Osborne's statement to the AFL convention at Tillamook that labor now holds the balance of power in Oregon politics is extremely interesting. Mr. Osborne spoke well of Charles A. Sprague, the Republican nominee as well as of Henry Hess, the Democratic candidate. It is rather unlikely the AFL convention will make an out-and-out statement of preference.

But in view of primary history, the Osborne speech raises some interesting speculations. Hess came into the race against Martin as a substitute for Dr. Hosch, of Bend, who was put forward originally by the CIO-Commonwealth-radical groups. Dave Beck, the Seattle labor boss whose goons are in deep trouble in Oregon, is credited generally with engineering this switch of candidates. Hess was accepted and supported by the CIO and the Commonwealth as well as by the AFL and his rather narrow victory over Martin may be attributed to this otherwise impossible alliance of the warring labor groups "agin' Martin."

November will present a different picture. Osborne's speech is an obvious warning that Hess cannot continue to "buddy" the CIO and the Commonwealth without sacrificing a great deal of AFL favor. Yet it is not going to be easy for Hess to shake off these pals of his. They are many and they are noisy and they claim him as their "baby," disputing Dave Beck's equity. Is this what Mr. Osborne has in mind when he says that labor (meaning of course AFL) holds a balance of power? Undoubtedly Mr. Osborne is aware that vast numbers of union people dislike CIO and Beckism with equal fervor. Likewise he undoubtedly knows that a great many union people will prefer Sprague who promises nothing except a square deal for everybody in and out of labor to the man whose alliances are impossible. Mr. Osborne's choice of words is notable. He urges:

"A responsibility to ignore expedients and to support the measures and candidates which promise the greatest degree of well being for the entire populace." Is the political truce with CIO over?

BEST KEPT TOWN ON THE COAST

Although Eugene home owners and house holders have given rather enthusiastic response to last spring's appeal to make Eugene "the best kept city on the Pacific Coast," we doubt if Eugene will rate any such distinction. Not this year. If such an award were made we would vote for Montesano, Washington, the little county seat of Grays Harbor county, down near Aberdeen and Hoquiam. Montesano has only about 2,500 population, but it is by all odds the neatest and "best dressed" municipality you will see in a long, long trek.

This impression is due partly to well painted houses, trim lawns, immaculate streets but mostly to the parks which the people there have built to beautify the approaches from all main roads. Residents of Montesano give much of the credit to Mrs. Nellie Kemp, one of the leaders in the Montesano Garden club. She and her co-workers have waged a year-in and year-out campaign to make the city fathers and the rest of the community aware that beauty can be an asset.

The parks and parkways at Montesano's city gates are not only well planned but perfectly kept. The parks are small, in keeping with the city's means, but they are remarkable for their trim hedges, brilliant flowers in season, and superb grass. There are no glaring signboards, junk heaps, weed patches or other jungle effects at Montesano's gates. Montesano, with a tenth of Eugene's opportunity to do something memorable has managed it.

Among Oregon cities, Ashland and Astoria at the extreme ends of the state have done better than most towns. We may be slighting some community not visited recently but we doubt it. Eugene could very easily lead in setting a pattern for all Oregon cities. This is a project that the growing male contingent in the Eugene Garden Club might take up. There is reason to believe the state highway commission would cooperate.

The situation in Europe seems to be permanently tense. What you might call past, present, and a terrible future tense.

WASHINGTON LETTER

BY RODNEY DUTCHER (NEA Washington Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, June 21.—Likelihood that the government will buy surplus supplies of clothing for distribution to people who can't afford to pay for any, as proposed by Sidney Hillman, reflects growing determination in Washington to provide "over-produced" necessities of life for those who lack them.

The plan considered by WPA officials for men's clothing would operate similarly to the Federal Surplus Commodities Corporation, which will be rapidly expanded. The FSCC program, under which surplus food is bought for distribution to relief families, has cost $160,000,000 in five years.

Latest FSCC plan, as yet unannounced, calls for purchases of cotton to be made into quilts and bed ticking for needy families.

Greatly increased distribution of milk for babies who now go without is also being considered. Secretary Wallace, who believes families of unemployed workers should be assured adequate nourishment and clothing, stresses the importance of fruits, vegetables, poultry and dairy products for such families.

All this is the exact opposite of the massacre of the "little pigs."

The aim in all programs and proposals for free distribution is to avoid displacement of any sales which might otherwise be made by retail stores. Clothing manufacturers, operating less than 40 per cent normal and suffering from price cuts, are as enthusiastic over the Hillman plan as farmers have been over FSCC operations. Hillman, president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and influential at the White House, also designed his plan to benefit retailers as well as to restore employment in the clothing industry.

Biddle Back Again

Francis Biddle, the slender, quick-witted and industrious Philadelphia lawyer selected as counsel for the TVA investigating committee, was chosen almost unanimously after the committee had questioned him at length. The vote was eight to one. All Democratic members and two Republicans favored Biddle. Senator Jim Davis of Pennsylvania, who had telephoned Biddle and asked him to come to Washington, didn't vote on the ground that "we're from the same state." Congressman Tom Jenkins of Ohio, TVA critic, cast the only vote against Biddle.

Biddle, a lifelong liberal and once secretary to Justice Oliver Wendell Holmes, admitted he had graduated from Groton and Harvard and that his firm represented corporations such as the Pennsylvania Railroad. Although Jenkins reported Biddle wasn't "much of a lawyer," the latter impressed the committee.

Chairman of the old National Labor Relations Board in the NRA period, Biddle left Washington indignant because Roosevelt—advised by Donald Richberg—had interfered with the board and failed to support it. A member of one of Philadelphia's first families, Biddle has demonstrated independence, bravery, ability and willingness to express himself freely and frankly.

The Facts About Iowa

As Roosevelt invited Senator Gillette to lunch, certain previously concealed facts about the Iowa primary began to leak out. For instance: Jim Farley originally picked Congressman Otha Wearin to oppose Gillette, partly because Wearin looked like a farmer, partly because he had money to finance his own campaign. Farley had expected to get Governor Kraschel on Wearin's side and Roosevelt was cocksure he could make Secretary Wallace support Wearin. Both failed.

Farley pulled in his neck, neither he nor Roosevelt daring to expose themselves as long as Wallace refused. The Harry Hopkins statement for Wearin was partly designed to smoke Wallace out. That failed, too.

Jimmy Roosevelt went in with a left-handed endorsement of Wearin in order to help Hopkins out of a hole. Although Jimmy denied he had had plans to go to Iowa for Wearin, explaining his doctors wouldn't have permitted them, the fact is that Jimmy had made arrangements with Ed Dunn of Mason City to do just that and had planned to speak at a big labor rally. Whether Jimmy's doctors discovered more than a case of cold feet is not clear. Anyway, those are the facts.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

BY DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN (Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine)

Of all of the great accomplishments of modern medical and public health science, those related to the welfare of the child seem most vital and significant.

When it is realized that 288 out of every thousand babies born in 1880 died before they were one year old and that today in most of our large cities the number of deaths for each thousand living infants has been reduced to about 70, the value of this work will begin to be realized.

There is no single phase of medical work which has attracted the amount of support from legislators, welfare workers, physicians and people generally that has been attracted by this objective.

A large part of the result must be credited to the provision of pure milk and pure water in our large cities. In many places the campaign against infant deaths has included visits by trained nurses to the homes of mothers of newborn babies, informing them of the proper care of the child; the development of infant welfare or consultation centers, to which the children of those unable to pay may be brought for suitable advice; the coordination of the efforts of a great many different agencies leading to a combined attack upon unnecessary deaths.

Indeed, a large part of the credit for what has been accomplished is the result of education of people generally in the care of the child. Much attention is being given to nutrition of the growing child.

In 1909 President Theodore Roosevelt called a White House conference on the problem of child welfare. At that time it was decided to create a Children's Bureau in the Department of Labor. This bureau was established in 1912 and constantly since that time has maintained efforts leading to education of the public and recognition of the various problems that relate to infant care.

It has been shown quite certainly that an adequate living wage for the worker is necessary in order to provide the infant with the necessary food and shelter as well as with medical care and that when wages are inadequate infant mortality is high.

Each of the new advances that has been made relative to the protection of infants and children against the hazards of life is being applied on a larger and larger scale in this country.

Special attention is given to the problem of the undernourished child, by teaching nutrition and by providing school lunches. Tuberculosis is prevented by the use of open-air schools, preventorium and sanatoriums.

Attention is also given to the teeth so as to prevent dental caries and to take care of cavities as they develop. Moreover, there are today special classes for backward children, crippled children and those defective in eyesight and in hearing.

The real objective is to prevent defects before they become too serious to make suitable control possible.

Today's Recipes

By NEA Service CHOCOLATE news is always good news. Lucy Malby, of Corning, N. Y., one of America's grandest thinker-uppers-of-better-recipes, writes excitedly, "Try this—it's better than brownies. Simply grand!" Let's try it!

Chocolate Squares

(15 1 1/2-inch squares) Two squares bitter chocolate, (2 ounces), 1/2 cup shortening, 1 cup sugar, 3 eggs, 3-4 cup cake flour, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1 cup nuts.

Melt chocolate and shortening together in top of double boiler. Remove from heat. Beat in sugar, then add eggs one at a time. Sift and measure flour, then sift together flour and baking powder. Add to chocolate mixture.

Stir in chopped nuts. Bake in a greased utility dish in moderate oven (350 degrees F.) for 40 minutes. If desired, top with de luxe chocolate frosting.

De Luxe Chocolate Frosting (Covers top of 12x8-inch cake) Three tablespoons butter, 3 squares chocolate (3 ounces, 2 sweet and 1 bitter), 1 3-4 cups sifted confectioners' sugar, 5 tablespoons hot milk, 1/2 teaspoon vanilla extract.

Melt butter and chocolate together in the top of a double boiler. Remove from heat. Dissolve sugar in hot milk. Pour sugar syrup into chocolate mixture. Add vanilla. Beat until thick enough to spread.
