

Winners Of Pet Parade Revealed

Webfoots outstanding basketball stars. Chickens, parakeets, parrots, canaries—all were included in the section for birds.

Snakes Squirm
A large variety of reptiles was displayed in the parade—including everything from water dogs to turtles. A bit of childish wisdom was displayed by one wagon which contained a large bowl with a turtle, surrounded by dolls from all nations, the whole of which was labeled, "The World Has Turned Turtle."

Reptiles were tagged by the red-capped Condon and Edison drum corps. And then came the cats! All sizes, shapes and colors ranging in age from the infancy of three days to the years of dignified patriarchy. A beautiful huge white cat decked with red ribbon, betrayed his unwillingness to participate in a parade by attempting to jump from his green baby buggy. A less experienced, younger kitten, throne in a white crepe paper contrivance, exhibited equal protest by emitting squeals of annoyance.

Rabbits, Too
Bunnies competed with cats for number, and were fully as varied in size and color. A blonde haired baby rode in a large wagon, reigning over a whole lot of rabbits in a big basket.

The lambs seemed the most playful of the lot, prancing about in fancy garlands. An obstinate calf balked in the middle of the parade, and after urgent pushes by two worried little children, took it into his head to run a race. He was followed by a bewildered St. Bernard who hesitated sociably in response to whistles from the crowds that thronged Willamette street.

A covered wagon rolled solemnly along, drawn by two huge oxen in contrast to a peppy demonstration by a kid's band which followed. And then there were dogs—everything from mutts to high strung thoroughbreds. Tailing the parade were the costumes, representing all characters from the evil witch to the playful clowns.

Ice Cream Served
The parade wound down Willamette to the Frances Willard school yards, where ice cream was served the kiddies. A total of 2400 servings of ice cream was distributed, indicating that approximately 2350 children entered the event.

Paris Emery, Universal news-reel cameraman, was on hand to photograph the affair, and KORE gave a descriptive broadcast of the parade.

Cooperation was given by the Boy Scouts and the police, who directed traffic, and held back the crowds. The services of George P. Hitchcock, who served as grand marshal, were indispensable. Eugene merchants contributed prizes for best entries.

This was the seventh annual pet parade, started in 1933 by the Eugene chamber of commerce for Lane county children.
