Hints About Hats

Another in a series by Emilie Hedblum formerly with Ransohoff's and I. Magnin & Co.

Hats for fall 1939 are flattering rather than amusing. The most important news—they fit the head and are much more head covering than they have been for some time.

The shapes are still varied enough to make the selection of a new hat most interesting. Sailors with their new edge treatment and back trim, berets come in at full tilt, to show your face, cover your back hair—but they are big. Pill boxes are varied in line—the little round ones, the square front, the one that is larger at the top; these to be worn at most becoming angles.

Many hats tilt forward, some dip, others are worn at the back of the head if your curls permit. The influence of the bustle dress is apparent in the trim and line of many hats. The position in its many versions, the youthful Scotch cap worn well forward and the always flattering beret are outstanding versions of the new types for fall.

MOLLIE STENGER

Formerly with Ungar's, Portland

Due to the quaint style trend in clothes this season, more attention is given to the figure than ever before.

There is much conversation concerning more bones and lacings to achieve the inverted champagne glass silhouette—however corset designers have proven that the narrow-waisted, rounded hip figure can be acquired every bit as well and much more comfortably with a well cut fabric and lastest corset.

That "lean-again-sit-the-window" look comes from a rightly constructed foundation garment which flattens the diaphragm and abdomen, plus correct posture and the properly corseted figure with that uncorseted look is still lovely to see.

LeGant takes care of this problem most satisfactorily with their high style garments and one will find the higher priced model duplicated perfectly in $5.00 garments for as many figure types.
