"A NEWSPAPER IS A CITIZEN OF ITS COMMUNITY"

IF WE GET INTO IT

There have been a great many guesses at the extent to which government would control business and industry in case the United States became involved in war. Most of these have been based on proposed bills like the May Bill which have been placed before Congress. They may also be based on the experience of the countries already involved in the war in Europe.

But there is a further basis for this sort of prediction, and one that is often forgotten today. That is the experience of the United States itself with centralized control during the World War.

A council of national defense had been set up in Washington months before the United States entered the war, in fact, during the summer of 1916. This council had the broad lines of economic coordination laid out long before the war came.

Within two months after the United States entered the war, co-ordination began in earnest with the setting up of the War Industries Board. This agency acted as purchasing agent for the army and navy and as a procurement staff for whatever was needed to carry on the war. It also had broad powers over the production and movement of commodities, such as to insure that the fighting forces would have what they needed at all times. Ask any business man over 60 years old what happened to him in 1918 if he wanted steel for a new plant in those days, and whether he got it unless he could show the War Industries Board the necessity for it.

A shipping board was set up to buy, build, and operate the ships which were to constitute the "bridge of ships to France," and the Emergency Fleet Corporation decided what ships were to go where, carrying what.

The Food Administration came along in August, 1917, to promote conservation, coordinate purchases, and control movement of foodstuffs. Of course the Committee on Public Information had already placed its informal but effective control over newspapers, movies, and books.

The Fuel Administration soon fixed the prices of coal and other fuel, and decided who should get how much. In the spring of 1918 the Railroad Administration took over the railroads. They narrowly escaped remaining permanently under government control after the war.

Thus on a basis of past experience, and without resorting to future guesswork, we knew that our own country was pretty close to totalitarianism during the period of the World War. Any new war would start where the last one left off.

This demonstrates the unpalatable truth that countries which fight totalitarianism must first become totalitarian themselves.

IRONY IN KENSINGTON

The original Wright airplane rests quietly, but not securely, in the Kensington Museum in England. Certain people interested in the aviation industry are worried lest it be destroyed in an air raid.

That would certainly be a touch of irony to make the gods themselves laugh. The crude little box-kite in which the Wright brothers lifted themselves off the dunes at Kill Devil Hill, North Carolina, only 36 years ago has already spawned monstrous progeny. The Wright plane went to England after a dispute between the inventors and the Smithsonian Institution in Washington. There have been many attempts to bring it back.

Now it is in real danger of being lost, along with the lives of hundreds of thousands of Englishmen. The brain of man, which, with daring and almost godlike inspiration, conceived the gift of flight, has failed to use the gift to any better purpose than to threaten with destruction not only man himself, but even the frail kite that is a monument to that daring.

Success of the Hitler-Stalin agreements indicates that nazism and communism are merely different labels for the same brand of poison. Of course, that's what Congressman Dies has been trying to tell us all along.

It is not difficult to understand the confusion among the uninitiated as to the difference between radio and rodeo, for each has its own brand of cowboys, the one singing, the other bucking.

It is about this time of year that the June bride finds the cooing stops and the billing begins.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By JOHN W. KELLY
WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 21—Affidavit of a former resident of Oregon is causing officials of the state department to scratch their heads and to throw some light on the failure of the British government to join the department with more active co-operation than heretofore evinced, in the investigation of the so-called submarine sinking of the Athena. The state department is seeking the facts of that disaster because American lives were lost.

Gus Anderson, for several years a resident of Salem, Ore., and student of the Willamette University, is author of the affidavit. Anderson says the Athena "may have been" attacked by a submarine, but no one saw a U-boat despite statements of excited survivors.

The Athena was a British passenger liner which departed from England with a passenger list of Americans, Canadians and Europeans, a few hours before war was declared. Two hundred miles off the Irish coast there was an explosion and the Athena was wounded, the first casualty in the war. Germans have denied sinking the ship; suggested it may have hit a British mine, or was purposely attacked by a British submersible to bring the U. S. into the war.

According to Anderson, the Athena carried arms. He says he saw them in the hold and the Athena was to be equipped as a commerce raider after it reached Halifax. This statement is sensational because all other reports declared the Athena was wantonly attacked when it was leaving the war zone with refugees and was not carrying ammunition. Anderson sticks to his story, insists that with his own eyes he saw the guns—and he had the run of the ship, on which he had made many crossings and knew officers and crew members intimately.

The former Willamette University student asserts that when the Athena had its explosion and the passengers were in lifeboats, a British liner, practically empty, was only about 40 miles away and did not come to the rescue. A Swedish steamer hearing the SOS from the Athena, although afraid of being subbed, rushed to the stricken vessel and picked up Anderson among others.

Instead of sinking immediately, the Athena rode high in the water for hours with pumps working and lights lit. British destroyers came along later and shot it to the bottom, after the captain removed the safe and his papers. Anderson's affidavit, which the state department is studying so carefully, recounts his personal experiences and observations. He finally landed in the United States on the City of Flint, on which he worked in the galley 17 hours a day.

Since leaving Salem, Anderson has conducted world-tours, and been an independent motion picture operator, taking films in China, Russia, the war in Spain and getting around generally.

Anderson's entire life has been investigated by the state department, no difficult task because of the file of his passports over a period of almost 20 years. He was given a cross examination and while his statement checked with other information, his assertion that the Athena carried arms caused eyebrows to lift. State department has wondered for a month at the apparent indifference of the British in probing the sinking of the Athena. Possibly Gus Anderson has furnished the clue.

Sub-rosa, house members are planning an investigation of the navy and a general shake-up. Certain congressmen suspect there is incompetency which amounts to a scandal. President Roosevelt, a former assistant secretary of the navy, is aware of the blunders being perpetrated, and is expected to appoint a secretary of the navy when congress meets in regular session. At present Charles Edison (son of the famed inventor, Thomas A.), is acting secretary, but his health is impaired. Mr. Roosevelt appointed the late Claude Swanson secretary in 1933, but Swanson was a sick man until his death and was never in active charge.

Recent rumor is that Col. Frank Knox, republican candidate for vice-president in 1936, may be offered the job, because Knox, and his Chicago newspaper, is supporting Mr. Roosevelt's plan to repeal the embargo. There is no foundation for the rumor, but it persists.

With no civil head, the navy has been run for years by gold-brained admirals (most of them ashore and only a few on sea duty). With a great program for expanding the navy, congressmen are wondering which two dozen new destroyers are so poorly designed that they may turn turtle with all on board.

Look for the first move by the house naval affairs committee, many of whom visited Tongue Point and naval bases on Puget Sound last September before the president called the special session.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEN
Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygeia, the Health Magazine

The week of October 22 to 29 has been proclaimed National Hearing Week by the president. It is a period during which physicians and others interested in the cause of hard hearing will devote themselves to emphasizing the prevalence of deafness and the need of discovering impairment of hearing in children as soon as possible.

The problem of educating and rehabilitating those who have already become hard of hearing will be given special attention. Some can be helped by modern technic in lip reading and others by using a suitable hearing device.

Experts estimate that there are from six to ten million people in the United States afflicted with hardness of hearing. They may be divided, as Dr. Gordon Berry points out, into two groups: those that are deaf, which means that they may have suffered a marked hearing impairment early in life before they learned to talk, and those who developed impairment of hearing as they grew older.

It is important to find out as soon as possible whether or not a baby can hear. Frequently the nurse is the first to discover the fact that the child has impaired hearing.

A child that does not hear well uses its eyes more than one that does. He finds no enjoyment in the use of a rattle or in other kinds of noise-making devices, and will not respond to a spoken word unless there is movement associated with the speaking.

There are three important causes of hardness of hearing in infancy. In the case of heredity the child is born deaf. There is apparently a tendency in certain families for the inheritance of a constitutional structure which causes loss of hearing.

Another cause is the development of any severe toxic disease or of any type of serious poisoning which may paralyze the nerve of hearing. Such paralysis may be associated with meningitis, scarlet fever, mumps, syphilis, or occasionally with measles, influenza, or diphtheria.

Excessive doses of quinine, particularly in the case of a sensitive person may cause some loss of hearing. A sudden, extremely loud noise or a violent blow on the ear may produce degenerative changes which may result in deafness.

In addition to the infections which may damage the nerves of hearing, there is the possibility of suppuration which destroys the small bones in the middle ear. Once the nerve which enables us to hear is destroyed or seriously damaged by an illness or poisoning, recovery of hearing is unlikely.

The most a specialist can do to preserve the amount of hearing that is left is to utilize the structures that are still intact and to relieve the body of nasal obstructions and other minor infections which may constitute an additional load for the damaged tissue to carry.
