"A NEWSPAPER IS A CITIZEN OF ITS COMMUNITY"

TEX AND TEAM BOTH OKAY!

It is nice when Oregon wins, but as long as Tex Oliver and his lads can play the game as they played it Saturday, there will be no wolf howls in this vicinity. Graybeal, Donovan, Jensen, Walden, Smith, Reginato, Cadanasso and the others who are now playing their last season for Oregon will be long remembered in these parts even though they have never reached "Rose Bowl." They have given us moments as great as can be had in sport.

The Rose Bowl years will come. Of that we feel just as sure as we can feel about anything in this extremely uncertain world. They will come as Tex Oliver goes on with his work of building Oregon football as a sport. There will occur in time the championship combinations, which are always so elusive even where coaches are much more richly endowed with "material."

The gratifying thing right now is that under Mr. Oliver's leadership Oregon's football teams make us proud whether they win or lose. They have all those qualities of intelligence and courage and daring which make football inspiring. On the field and off of it they reflect the influence of a leader who is worthy of that old phrase "scholar and gentleman."

Football is a worthy sport as Tex Oliver teaches it. We hope the Monday Morning Quarterbacks and others will not fail to let Tex and his team know that they are appreciated. We hope that Tex can go on to become the Alonzo Stagg of Oregon athletics. It doesn't matter that we can't always win because we always have so much to cheer for.

ANOTHER UNIT FOR ROUTE F

The building of Route F, the short-road from Eugene to tidewater, has been a long and laborious process, mainly because the importance of this original mail and stage route to the Coast was not appreciated back in 1917 when the state began the laying out of its basic road system. For that matter, it is only in the last 10 years that a good many people in "the Valley" (as they say in West Lane) appreciated the possibilities of the Coast.

"Why there's nothing down there," said a life-long Eugenean, as late as 1928, when the battle was on to complete the Mapleton-Florence link of the Siuslaw road at water grade instead of throwing another "shoofly" over Mapleton mountain.

Route F is now recognized as an indispensable factor in any plans for modern port development on the Siuslaw. This does not mean that the present Lake creek route will be abandoned or neglected. On the contrary, plans are under way now for an extensive improvement program to facilitate the extensive logging and trucking on that road. Both roads tie together into any port program.

At the present moment, the Route F problem divides into two parts. That portion of the road which lies between Eugene and Richardson is already accepted as part of the state's secondary system. The new appropriation of $62,000 to rebuild the Oak Hill-Veneta section next summer confirms the policy of the state highway department to modernize this part of the road, as rapidly as eligible funds are available.

The so-called Richardson-Mapleton cut-off (the tunnel section) has been the more difficult part of the problem. It has been an orphan child, not eligible to any regular funds till taken into the secondary system. With the cooperation of WPA, the county has been able to complete the east side grade to the tunnel site and the west side grade should be completed the coming summer.

Then comes the problem of getting state and federal aid for the opening of the tunnel and the progressive rebuilding of the Veneta-Richardson section. What is indispensable, we believe, is to get rid of the feeling that Route F and any of the other major road projects in this area are antagonistic or even competitive. They all fit into ONE ROAD SYSTEM, which proceeds step by step to completion.

The feet of persons coming to live in California are said to grow about a size larger after a few months of residence in the Sunshine State. The Chamber of Commerce is not expected to issue any glowing circulars on the subject.

A New York instructor is charged with attempting to bribe his superior to gain a promotion. An apple from the teacher.

With reports coming through that French soldiers are spending their time fishing in the Rhine and German soldiers are playing football, we can expect to have the war news moved back to the sports page any day now.

Girls at Lasell Junior College in Newton, Mass., have come out brazenly wearing men's garters to hold up their ankle socks, thereby providing the last shred of evidence that nothing is sacred.

WASHINGTON LETTER

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 13.—Bundled in an overcoat, rifle on shoulder, a doughboy with measured tread, paces back and forth past a block of dazzling white marble beneath which, in eternal sleep, is "An American Soldier Known Only Unto God." From the windswept slope of Arlington cemetery (where also rest two Oregon senators, George E. Chamberlain and Frederick Steiwer), can be seen Washington Monument, the capitol dome, the roof of the war, state and navy building. Comes another Armistice Day with air full of war talk.

Armistice Day, 1919, and this is the American scene:
 Great Britain and France placing orders for thousands of planes, bombers, reconnaissance bombers, attack bombers, pursuit planes—some $175,000,000 for these aerial weapons.

Canada placing orders for training planes. Canada to be the base where fliers are instructed in the technique of flying and killing.
 The army, to aid the allies, revoking its rule that no new type plane can be sold to foreigners until 18 months after the United States has used the type. Army contracts for 3500 planes placed last spring not being rushed in order to permit factories to supply the needs of belligerents.

To avoid a neutrality law, intended to keep America out of war, an influential ship company arranges to transfer the registry of eight vessels to the Panama flag; throws out of employment 8000 American seamen and advertises for British officers and crewmen.

British and French military missions in the national capital to purchase supplies.

American financial moguls planning to float a billion dollar issue of securities for Great Britain, which still owes the United States about five billion from the first world war.

Congress has enacted a "cash and carry" policy; belligerents can buy for cash and take purchases away in other than American bottoms. But at the time President Roosevelt was signing the bill, Leslie Burgen, minister of supply for Britain, publicly discussed methods of circumventing the "cash and carry" and enabling the allies to buy on credit.

The espionage act of 1917 revived. Fingerprinting of workers in factories filling orders for belligerents. Elaborate precautions taken to guard against sabotage by secret agents.

Canadians, English, Scots and French declaring American troops should be sent to the battlefields, asserting it is as much America's war as it is that of the allies.

Propaganda as intense as it was before the entry of the United States into the first world war. British lecturers arriving on every boat, never neglecting an opportunity to be interviewed. Propaganda by radio from government-controlled stations in the war zone.

German pocket battleship captures American freighter carrying contraband.

Submarines operating in what Mr. Roosevelt designates as "territorial waters."

Expectation that someday German planes will cross the Atlantic and attack Newfoundland and Canada, despite Mr. Roosevelt's interpretation that the Monroe Doctrine includes Canada as well as the Latin Americas.

Government economists warning industry and agriculture not to expect a war boom and war prices, as experienced in the first world war.

Warlike preparations described as "national defense." Billions of dollars being spent and two more billions to be voted by the next congress for the same purpose. A two-ocean navy planned. Thousands of students to be trained as pilots and mechanics for planes. Selective draft which can place 7,500,000 men under arms.

Complete program worked out for industry, labor and civilian activities in event of an emergency.

Somewhere in France the Unknown Soldier made the supreme sacrifice in "the war to end all wars" and "make the world safe for democracy." In various hospitals, concealed from all eyes except the attendant nurses and internes, are men without faces; in others (St. Elizabeth's which the pacing doughboy can see as he passes and repasses the block of marble), men whose minds cracked as a result of their experiences "over there."

A Gold Star mother places a flower at the base of the tomb.

Detachments from American Legion posts, flags fluttering in the breeze, stand at attention, salute their unknown buddy, and buglers blow the ever-impressive "Taps."

Armistice Day and another world conflagration in the making.

AN EDITORIAL ON HEALTH

By DR. MORRIS FISHBEIN
 Editor, Journal of the American Medical Association, and of Hygiene, the Health Magazine

Up to this time, the control of malignant endocarditis has been exceedingly difficult. Once the condition is fully developed, death occurs anywhere from three months to two and a half years later.

Physicians in Boston recently analyzed the records of 250 cases of the disease. The study of the records showed the complete ineffectiveness of practically all treatment tried up to the time sulfanilamide was discovered. Then it was found that this drug and its new derivatives seemed to produce improvement in some cases.

More recent is the discovery of sulfapyridine. This drug has the power to lower the temperature and to eliminate germs from the blood. Sixty-five patients were treated with sulfapyridine and all of them seemed to improve. Yet there was a recovery in only one case.

Investigators in Chicago made some studies of this infection in animals which were inoculated with the green-producing streptococcus. They found that there are vegetations which grow on the heart valves and germs are deposited in these vegetations. One of the difficulties was that the drug could not get at the germs in the vegetations.

Recently the investigators conceived the possibility of treating patients with a substance called heparin which prevents coagulation of blood and the vegetations. At the same time they gave these patients the sulfapyridine which acts on the germs with the idea that the heparin would prevent the formation of the vegetation and the sulfapyridine would kill the germs to bring about control of the disease.

Investigators in Boston also tried this technique and have recently reported six patients treated by this method with somewhat encouraging results.

The new method is not yet offered as a cure for subacute bacterial endocarditis. It is here described simply as showing the trend of scientific research in an effort to find a method of treatment for a disease that was almost invariably fatal.
