Recipe Ideas

By NEA Service Cold nights and hot puddings—that's a natural, Kenneth Roberts, the noted author, praises them in "Good Maine Food," a tangy collection of recipes by Marjorie Mosser. The traditional Maine cooks believe that a pinch of salt and a few grains of grated nutmeg improve the taste of any pudding. Let's see what it all comes to when we follow these suggestions even though we live as far away from the Maine coast as California.

Indian Pudding (Serves 4 to 6)

Two pints milk, 4 tablespoons corn meal, 1/2 cup dark molasses, 1/2 cup sugar, 1/2 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon, 1 egg, 2 tablespoons butter, 1/2 cup raisins, 1 cup cold milk.

Boil 1 pint milk, stir in corn meal, cook 10 minutes and then add molasses, sugar, salt, cinnamon, well-beaten egg, butter and raisins. Mix well, then add 1 pint cold milk. Four into baking dish and bake 1/2 hour. Add 1 cup cold milk, and bake another 1 1/2 hours. Serve with hard sauce, cream or vanilla ice cream.

Dark Steamed Pudding (Serves 4 to 6)

Three cups sifted cake flour, 1 small teaspoon soda, 1 teaspoon salt, 1/2 teaspoon cloves, 1/2 teaspoon cinnamon, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, 1 egg, beaten, 1 scant cup molasses, 1 cup suet, chopped fine, or 1/2 cup butter, 1 cup milk, 1 cup raisins, stoned and cut up, 1 teaspoon vanilla.

Combine all ingredients. Steam for 3 hours in receptacle large enough to give pudding space in which to swell. And of course, serve with hard sauce.
