WHY NOT A "GARAGE SCHOOL?"

There are reasons behind the ever-increasing safety records which are being established by American airplanes...

It is unfortunate that an accident in the air commands blacker display in the press than one twice as bad on the highway...

One of the principal reasons for the good record above is the intensive ground school training given those learning to fly...

Students participating in the Eugene civilian pilot training program attend classes five nights a week for nearly eight weeks...

Safety is stressed more than any other single item in the ground school work...

"Don't drink before or while you fly." "Don't overload your airplane." "Don't bank the ship more than 70 degrees."

They were given assignments to teach them the limits of airplane construction and the possibilities of the engine...

If the automobile ever ceases to be a major killer, an important part of any educational program will have to deal with the instruction of beginners...

Airplanes, when first introduced, met with frequent disaster and scared the public. For that reason it has been necessary to PROVE they are safe...

The aviation industry is attempting to ESTABLISH safety records, while the automotive interests are yet half-heartedly hoping theirs will someday be RE-ESTABLISHED.

They could well look to a "garage school" for an answer.—W. H.

FINGER-SMEARED PROPAGANDA

Probably more embarrassed than the first youngster caught with jam prints after illegally visiting grandma's pantry is the Briton who left his finger smears on a recent widely-published picture showing five Nazi airplanes screaming to earth.

"Five German planes falling in flames over English channel," read the censor-approved caption from London. "One of the most dramatic pictures to come out of the war in Europe," American news services elaborated after it was flashed across the Atlantic.

Many acquainted with dark-room tricks studied the photograph, after the first breath-taking glimpse of the masterpiece, and expressed doubt so perfect and complete a picture could have been taken from the ghostly cliffs of British Dover...

more lionish in his defense. While the picture was being circulated over America, Londoners became curious, too. The original print was demanded of the photographer...

The censors, who had, word from London declares, unwittingly passed the picture as genuine, were quick to explain and express apologies. They realized that, in the future, propaganda photos would be discredited, even though genuine.

The lesson for Americans is to refuse to believe war claims which have the least hint of being fake. The stuff being issued from all war capitals is largely unadulterated exaggeration.

Neither the British nor the Germans can be criticized for their supreme effort to state their respective cases to the neutrals of the world. The English, with their spine nailed to wall, with their forces girded for a fight for survival, are desperate. They need to present their position as favorable as possible to maintain confidence...

When in doubt, disbelieve. History, it must be hoped, will tell the truth 20 years after peace comes.—W. H.

Now it's the combination plane-auto that's being developed. A parachute as well as roller skates will be standard equipment for the gals from now on.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By JOHN KELLY PORTLAND—Big Jim Farley has been busy over the long distance phone from New York buzzing Oregon Democrats (not new dealers) as to their reaction on Willkie's speech...

"I told Farley," reports a well known Democrat, "that his stand at the convention and his resignation as national committee chairman was the right one. Today, I said—and I mean it—he is the greatest Democrat in America; that he typifies the best traditions of the party and for him to sit tight and some day his fidelity to principles will be generally recognized."

An eavesdropper for this column heard another grade A Democrat talking to Farley say: "You're a better man than he is, Gunga Din," the obvious comparison being with the Man in the White House.

In the several conversations over the telephone held by Farley with Oregon Democrats in the past three days in not one instance, according to the information received by this column, did the local Democrats make a prediction of party victory in November on the basis of current conditions. It so happened that the Oregonians contacted by genial Jim are all of the old-line persuasion who have feelings and views on party matters similar to his own.

All those public troungling Farley knowers are for Mr. Roosevelt to hold their jobs; Jim wants to know what his kind of Democrats are thinking. In the process of gathering information for a size-up of the Oregon situation there has been discovered what appear to be violations of the Hatch act by federal payrollees. There are also whisperings of large sums to be poured into Oregon to keep this state in the new deal column.

Oregon postmasters—some of them—have received letters from a government official in the state explaining that the state quota for the Hyde Park library is short and inviting the postmasters to kick in for the cause. How generous the response, if any, is not known at this time. Enforcement of the Hatch act has been delegated to the U. S. attorneys, and that official for Oregon is Carl C. Donaghy.

Private advices from the national capital are to the effect that Wendell Willkie will campaign in the Pacific coast states. He will speak according to tentative arrangements, in Los Angeles and San Francisco, then hop to Washington state, speaking in Seattle and Spokane. Oregon is passed, as the schedule is now being made up, to save time, on the assumption that Senator Charles L. McNary will be doing the spade work August 27 at the state fair grounds. The plan may be revised, however, and Willkie pause for a talk in Portland.
