"GOLDEN DOOR" FOREVER CLOSED

Back 50 years or more ago, a colossal statue, gift of the Republic of France, rose at New York's ocean gateway.

The Republic of France is no more, having only recently officially become The French State. The statue still stands. Liberty, they called her, "Liberty Enlightening the World," with a brave torch raised against darkness.

For that dedication a poem was read. Its words had been inscribed on the monument. They were by Emma Lazarus, and the last lines read,

"Send these, the homeless, tempest-tossed, to me:

"I lift my lamp beside the golden door."

They came freely, for many years, those men and women disillusioned and disheartened with the Old World, to seek new homes and a better life in the New. They were for decades new blood that freshened and invigorated the life of the growing Republic. Times changed. The stream was regulated, reduced. Then came evil times even to the New World, and the stream dropped to a trickle.

War convulsed Europe, and certain minorities of race and politics have now become homeless wanderers in Europe, wanted at home only as fodder for revengeful rifles, unwanted and burdensome in temporary haven abroad. Their state becomes progressively more desperate as country after country falls before the invaders. Many earnest efforts have been made to bring them to the New World. Mexico has taken many, especially those closely tied to her speech and culture. The Dominican Republic, Cuba, and other western countries have humanely helped. The United States has not done what its great resources, population and traditions might suggest.

One of the reasons may be that most of the efforts to bring in refugees have been privately backed by political, social, or racial groups whose interest is presumed by many to be special rather than general. Naturally, the United States does not want immigrants selected by groups and sub-groups with special interests in mind. It wants immigrants selected by its own government with national interests only in mind. But only the special groups seem active in the matter; people generally remain indifferent, or hostile, thinking of unemployment and their own jobs.

The government has just rejected a plea from France that thousands of refugees there from Luxembourg, Belgium and Germany be received here. The government, probably quite properly, suggested that France first release 3500 refugees who already have American visas, but who in the tangle between France and Germany, cannot get exit permits. Between indifference and red tape, people are perishing.

For one reason or another, Liberty may still lift her lamp beside the golden door, but the door is almost closed.

FARM PROSPERITY—MADE TO ORDER

There's something a little nerve-wracking about this thing they call the Farm Problem.

Primarily the objective of the farmer is pretty much the same as that of the man in the factory. Both want a fair return for their labor. But there is one difference: In addition to being a working man, the farmer is a business man in his own right, providing his own capital, shouldering his own overhead, seeking his own markets. And in that difference lies the Farm Problem.

When the depression came, the federal government decided that since both business, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, and the working man, through work-relief agencies, were being given governmental assistance, the farmer, as a combination of both, was entitled to some help. So Uncle Sam stepped in to see what could be done.

Well, here's what the situation looks like today: Of all the major crops in the United States, only two—soy beans and oats—are unsupported by federal loans. Soy bean farmers, however, are clamoring for governmental loans. And it may be only a question of time before oat-raisers decide that they better see about this pot-of-gold business.

The purpose of these loans? To keep prices up. Ordinarily, by the time a farmer harvests his crop, he is pretty nearly broke. He's got to unload and take what he can get to carry him through the winter and to pay off mortgages and interest.

But if Uncle Sam steps in and lets him have some money on account, based on the current market price of whatever he's raising, the farmer can store his produce until the market price rises.

It looks good, but there's one other side of the picture. The defense commission recently reported that one-third of the nation is under-nourished. And according to Bruce Catton, Washington columnist, the farmer's domestic market would be worth about a billion dollars more than it is today if every person were able to buy as much food as a family with an income of $100 a month normally buys.

Which means that every time farm prices go up, under the current setup, the folks in the lower one-third can afford to buy just so much less of the food products they need. Which in turn means that surpluses increase, and prices must continue to be kept up by artificial means.

Where will it all end up? How long can American economy go on in this vicious circle? At best, it's a guess, and yours is as good as anyone else's.

PAN AMERICANISM BY AIR

It's a good bet that just about everyone in North and South America is glad to see something being done about bringing the continents closer together. We mean the new Pan American schedules.

A 48-hour service is to be inaugurated between Miami and Rio de Janeiro. Shortly after the first of the year, a number of other new flights will be placed in operation, with planes going to Puerto Rico, the Bahamas, Central and South America.

With schedules now in operation, this will all add up to a total of 137 departures for Latin America a week.

Pan American conferences are fine. And so too is the increasing popularity of air travel between the two continents.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By JOHN W. KELLY
 Register-Guard Washington Reporter
 WASHINGTON, D. C., Jan. 18.—There are two reasons for the shipbuilding program of the President: First, the shipbuilding is almost smack-out of cargo carriers worth while; and second, the British have lost heavily. In the United States today there are but 1,251 seagoing vessels of 2,000 tons and over, and of these 882 are more than 20 years old—and 20 years is very, very old. It simmers down that the United States has 369 cargo carriers more or less up to the minute, and 369 ships for a nation supposed to have a merchant marine is a bottleneck.

To make matters worse, the United States (through private shipowners) sold 190 cargo boats aboard last year and most of these went to the British. These boats represented 1,007,282 tons. Shippers from Oregon and Washington descended upon the national capital and begged the U. S. Maritime Commission for some of the old, laid-up fleet. After a great deal of prodding the commission bestirred itself and was about to aid the Pacific northwest when the British began bidding for everything in sight.

One result of the cargo shortage is that available space for lumber from the northwest mills has been taken up until April. Eastern buyers, if they are in a rush, are directing that lumber go by rail. From this situation has developed higher prices for Pacific coast lumber (spruce is almost unobtainable) and the explanation is that the increase is due to transportation cost.

The 31 vessels to be constructed by the Oregon Shipbuilding Corporation, with red-headed Charley Shea as president; the possible five higher class cargo carriers bid for direct to the Maritime Commission (not to be confused with the 31 vessels) by another Oregon firm; the two mine layers to be built by Willamette Iron, and net tenders by Commercial Iron Works, with others in sight, will make Portland a genuine maritime center. The total of the contracts will approximate $85,000,000 to $70,000,000 at this writing. It is still only a drop in the bucket when compared to orders placed on Puget Sound and in California for shipbuilding.

Day after the inauguration William S. Knudson, director of OPM, will call together all the governors who are here to attend the ceremonies and talk turkey to them. Knudson intends telling them what is needed in the way of access roads and he wants the governors to see that these roads are built without loss of time. An access road is a piece that is built to accommodate a plant, cantonment or other government defense project. Some of these access roads will cost about $1,000,000; in certain cases they will cost more than the federal aid the state will receive from government.

Rep. James W. Mott, Oregon Republican, is not satisfied with the Knudson arrangement. Mr. Mott is urging Representative Cartwright, chairman of the house committee on roads, to call the committee and work out a bill for military highways. This bill would be distinct from the federal aid fund. It would be contrary to Mr. Roosevelt's policy of building no roads that are not already authorized, but so many want military highways the Mott idea may get by.

With army officers being shifted to posts in Oregon and Washington, the matter of moving their household effects has presented a problem to the war department. The household goods carriers' bureau is required to submit competitive bids to obtain movement of household goods although railroads and motor carriers of general freight are given the war department freight at regular published tariff rates. The bureau has taken up the situation with Ralph Budd, in charge of transportation for the National Defense Advisory Commission. If no satisfaction can be obtained, the bureau proposes taking it up with congress. Hundreds of officers are being assigned to such places as Fort Lewis, McCord field, Everett, Vancouver and Spokane, and others are to be sent to Portland, Pendleton and Hermiston later. Movement of their household goods represents thousands of dollars, and the bureau wants at least some of this business.

None of Oregon's sawmills have been included in contracts with the Chemical Warfare service, but the Carlisle Lumber Co. of Washington has been given the task of furnishing some of the charcoal to be used in gas masks. No explanation has been made for the failure of Secretary Ikes to attend the President's funeral to congress. Average wage paid WPA workers is $55 a month. An effort will be made to increase this and at the same time reduce the number of workers one-third. Business as usual will be slapped down to aid national defense and the lease-lend program.

Walter G. Menzies to Speak Sunday Evening at Christian Church

G. B. Schmid, Evangelist, Opens Meetings at Nazarene Church; Choir to Give Concert

By JEAN RANDOLPH
 (Register-Guard Church Editor)
 A DISTINGUISHED visitor in Eugene is Walter G. Menzies, for 40 years a missionary in India for the Christian church, who will speak Sunday at 7:30 p. m. at the First Christian church. For his outstanding service to the people of India, he has received the King Emperor's silver medal and the Coronation medal.

Born in Scotland, Mr. Menzies was graduated from West of Scotland university a short time before he came to the United States. He studied at Butler college and the College of Missions at Indianapolis, Ind., and worked among the Disciples of Christ in Kansas. He married an American woman, Miss Hattie Smith.

Go To India
 After a year's language study, the missionaries opened a new mission station at Rath, India. During a famine, they cared for many women and children, and laid the foundation for the present Women's Industrial Home at Kulpahar. They later went to the jungle station of Peppara Road, where Mr. Menzies established the farming system for which he is widely known. Each year, he promoted an agricultural fair in which both Christians and non-Christians participated.

Mr. Menzies is now retired from active service, and is traveling through the United States speaking under the auspices of the United Christian Missionary society.
