Purse, Money, Keys Taken From Restroom

Here's a situation! A woman quite bewildered stopped in at the Register-Guard office Wednesday with a problem. Someone, she reported, took her purse from the city park restroom. It contained all her papers, money—and most important—the keys to her car. She has been travelling, all her clothes—and the place she sleeps—are locked up. It will be rather uncomfortable for her Wednesday evening if she can't find her keys.

The person who took her brown purse may keep the money in it, she says if the keys and papers are returned. These are the things most important. She will start no action against the person if the articles are returned, she promised. The keys may be left at the Register-Guard office.

London Newspaper Advertisises Liquid 'Silk' Stockings

An example of the type of advertisements which American women may be reading in the future is given in a recent issue of the London Daily News, received at the Eugene chamber of commerce. The advertisement advises women to "save on stockings" by using "Silktons" a preparation which "gives bare legs the elegance of sheer silk."

The liquid "silk stockings" are advertised as guaranteed hole-proof. The add also assures women that they will not harm the skin. The preparation can be mixed in various shades.
