WEAKNESS IS FATAL

The United States is slow to admit that the world is what it is.

For two years the world has been beating on our door, sounding sirens, and ringing alarms, urging us to wake up. Gosh, how we hate to get up in the morning!

Britain hated, too, to wake from that pleasant slumber. She watched and hoped while her potential allies, one by one, fell before the aggressor. At last she woke painfully to that last lone struggle against that aggressor.

For 45 years the United States has gazed dreamily out across the Pacific. We saw Japan whip China in 1895 and Russia in 1905, getting the Kurile Islands and half of Formosa. We saw Japan annex Korea in 1910. We saw the Japanese effort to obtain from Mexico a naval base at Magdalena Bay. We saw the German concession at Kiaochow in China, and the island of Yap fall to Japan after the World War. We saw Japan leave the League of Nations and take many "mandated" islands permanently. We saw the Pacific Four-Power treaty for status quo in the Pacific signed by Japan and later repudiated when Japan saw fit. We saw Manchuria, North China, South China, and now French Indo-China fall successively to Japanese arms.

This record of 45 years shows two things: Japan, rightly or wrongly, feels an urge to expand. It has never hesitated to act on that urge whenever chances looked good.

In view of these things, is there the slightest doubt that Japan will grab the Netherlands Indies, eastern Siberia, or even the Philippines, whenever the chances look good? No. Already, using the Indo-China aggression as a lever, Japan puts pressure on Thailand (Siam) for "concessions."

The fate of the Netherlands Indies, source of rubber and tin, is important to the United States. We have spent millions in the Philippines to help an independent people develop independent institutions, not to make a fat prize for Japan.

Perhaps the best chance to halt further Japanese penetration into southeast Asia is to make it quite clear that there is no weakness there. Public declaration by Britain, the Netherlands, and the United States that a single step beyond French Indo-China means war with all three might do the job. It might not. But it is the best chance. Weakness is the one fatal error.

With Singapore and the Netherlands Indies in Japanese hands, the Philippines are untenable. They, too, would fall. China could no longer hold out. A vast new empire would have at its mercy any and every contact the United States might wish to make with Asia, just as another power threatens to have at its mercy every such contact with Europe.

This is insufferable and unthinkable. It is time to wake up. There is a point where patience ceases to be a virtue and verges on sheer stupidity.

THERE ARE MANY TO PROTECT

Why this sudden furor about inflation, anyway? Who cares?

You care, for one.

You care if you are one of the 45,000,000 Americans who hold Social Security cards, or the wife or child of such a holder. You care if you are one of the nearly 40,000,000 Americans who are beneficiaries of ordinary life insurance, or of the 90,000,000 industrial policies, or the 25,000 group policies.

And that begins to get along to almost everybody.

The spectacular losses in a period of inflation come to those who have money. But on the other hand, such people usually manage to wangle through it somehow. It is the little fellow, the fellow on a small and inelastic salary or wage, the fellow with the small saving account or insurance nest-egg who is swept down into the depths of unspectacular misery in a runaway inflation.

Many more people have a stake in preserving some kind of stability in the relationship between money and the prices of things than ever before. Forty-five millions of people now have Social Security accounts who did not have them a few years ago. Such of them as have made over $250 a month, for instance, for a period of 10 years will, when they reach 65 years of age, begin to receive $44 a month until they die. Such a man's widow, his unmarried children under 18, are also in line for benefits.

So every man and woman working under Social Security has a stake in preventing inflation, even though many of them are apparently not conscious of it. For if, by the time they reach age 65, that $44 a month won't buy cigarettes, the whole elaborate scheme for their protection and security collapses just when the power to earn is also gone.

That is why every effort must be made now to restrain the rising price-wage cycle. That is why the government is trying to sell Defense Bonds. In buying Defense Bonds, you lend your actual money to the government, which will pay it back after 10 years with interest. If the government does not get enough money that way, it will borrow it from banks, which simply create the credit where no money existed before, thus expanding the currency without adding correspondingly to production. That is inflation.

The prospect of inflation is not something that concerns only the rich. It concerns every man, woman and child in the United States, and the children, perhaps, most of all.

An elephant lives 400 years—maybe because baggage men don't handle their trunks.

Roosevelt and Churchill agreed on eight points—and any one of 'em is sharp enough to stick Hitler.

Remember when women used to hide their rouge? Nowadays they rouge their hide.

"Well-dressed men should have 10 suits"—fashion note. Some lawyers dress well on one.

"Houseboat Laundry Blows Up"—headline. No doubt the clothes were washed ashore.

Extra! Dressmakers are busy, now that the slacks season is about over.

Why is it the fattest people always sit between you and the aisle?

WASHINGTON LETTER

By PAUL DUNHAM

ARMY morale is not what it should be in the midst of maneuvers in the Pacific northwest, according to reports. Morale is, simply, discipline. Soldiers on duty in the vicinity of Olympia have nonchalantly hitch-hiked into Tacoma and Seattle to buy cigarettes when supposed to be guarding the highways against the invaders. Soldiers say they want to go home because they have learned all they can be taught with the inadequate equipment; if they had full equipment they would not mind remaining in the army until they were familiar with it and then go home and become part of a reserve pool of trained men.

The men fail to enthuse over sham fighting and it is regarded more as play acting than anything else, although of course, it is excellent training for the officers in the disposition of their men. Troops, by and large, do not expect to do any real fighting, for they were drafted for a defense army, not as an expeditionary force, and they are of the belief that no foreign invasion will be attempted. For this reason the average selectee and guardsman is not inclined to take the maneuvers seriously and they are more interested in the outside amusements than in the business of soldiering.

In the first world war the men were drafted and assembled at Fort Lewis where they were given preliminary training with bayonet drills; they realized that it would be only a matter of months when they would be actually fighting for their lives, and to the hardened veteran of the AEF the present army is considered a bunch of slacks. With the extra $10 a month the army will soon be the highest paid bunch of civilians in the world, yet they wish to get back to civilian life and these national defense jobs in industry.

ALTHOUGH not included in the initial order for "type ships, insiders assert that for some time commission will place contracts for some of these vessels with the yards on Columbia and Willamette rivers and in the Tacoma-Seattle area. C ships, the up-to-date cargo carriers designed by the maritime commission, are now under construction in Puget sound yards and the vessels launched there have been so satisfactory that the yard will be given additional contracts to keep them occupied for the next two years at least.

In Portland the Oregon Shipbuilding company, a Henry Kaiser outfit, is engaged on two score "ugly duckling" type and when these have been completed the better and faster C type will be ordered. Meanwhile, however, the priorities are becoming a nuisance with the shipyards, particularly with regard to the engines.

THE new tax bill by the senate is more drastic than the measure which was rushed through the house of representatives under the gag rule. The lowered base, which was avoided by the house, has been considered favorably by the senate committee and this will prove one of the bones of contention when the measure goes to conference which it must do. Under the senate proposal many people who have never filed an income tax statement will be brought into the fold and made to pay substantially on their income. As now written the senate proposal will hook thousands of married and single individuals in Pacific northwest states, especially those who are employed in the shipyards and aircraft factories who are drawing enough pay to qualify them as contributors to the income tax office. The house is more moderate, and this matter will be ironed out in the series of conferences before the bill is finally sent to the president.

DAIRYMEN of the Pacific northwest are now said to be receiving the highest price for their milk that has been paid in 12 years. Practically every milk factory is working on a 24-hour basis, three shifts. Milk canners have already been told how many thousands of cases they must produce for the armed forces of the United States and for the lend-lease program. They were told what they must produce; they were not asked how much. For the first time since the depression the dairymen have a market for every pound of butter fat they can take to the factories. The cheese factories are in the same position as the canneries bidding for the dairymen's milk and operating around the clock. Principal fly in the ointment for the dairymen is the difficulty in obtaining skilled milkers. The young men, brought up on dairies, are leaving for the shipyards and the airplane factories and other industries having defense or war orders, and the dairy operators are on a constant search for men to fill the places of their sons and hired hands who have left.
