YOUNG BLOOD FOR THE ARMY

Two steps are now being taken which should help greatly in building for the United States the kind of an Army which it has been shown is necessary to its safety.

First, arbitrary age limits have been set for active service with troops. There will be no more second lieutenants over 30, first lieutenants over 35, captains over 42, colonels over 55; not even any major generals of division over 62. Officers over those ages now serving with troops will be gradually transferred to "inside" or "desk" jobs. It will be nothing to their discredit. Many of them have served faithfully and well, but the lesson of World Wars I and II have convinced the War Department that "only young and vigorous officers can endure the rigorous demands of field service."

Second, the current maneuvers are going to result in a vigorous "plucking." Orders have gone out to all commanders to report the names of all officers not satisfactorily performing their duties. They will be reclassified; either a new type of duty will be recommended, or permitted to resign. Here again, there is not necessarily any discredit to officers reclassified. But military leadership is a special quality, and a man may have loyalty, willingness and many other good traits, yet not be cut out for active leadership of a military unit.

The maneuvers now going on are strenuous and exacting. Sometimes they have entailed real hardship and taxed the endurance of soldiers and officers to the limit. They have approximated war conditions more closely than any similar maneuvers ever held in the United States.

Maneuvers under such conditions give a better chance to test officer leadership than anything else short of actual war. Deficiencies are apt to be starkly revealed. That is what maneuvers are for. In World War I there was time for very little of this, and as a result, many officers who went to France were undertrained and otherwise unfitted for command. It is encouraging to see that the War Department is determined to prevent, so far as possible, anything like this happening again.

This sort of a weeding out always causes some disappointment and hardship, but it must be done. It should be remembered that those thus separated from active field command may be just as loyal, just as devoted, just as faithful as those who remain.

In a field, however, in which men's lives are at stake, nothing less than this can be done. We hope it is done effectively and promptly.

MERCY IS NOT FORGOTTEN

The major national effort today is an effort of force. The United States did not choose the international game of force that is being played today. Others chose it, and we are intent that our own power shall be such that we do not lose out in the game.

Yet in the midst of the billions being poured out to build defensive force for ourselves and others resisting aggression, it is pleasant to see that mercy has not been entirely trampled underfoot in the rush—nearly $22,000,000 worth of food, clothing and medical supplies have been sent abroad for relief or charity in the first six months of this year.

It is a pitiful drop to dilute the bitter cup the world is drinking, yet so far as it goes, it is good. No matter what happens, it will not be regretted, and it should not be allowed to dry up, but should be augmented into as great a stream as possible.

Whatever your position in life, take care of your health. It doesn't care how important you are!

In some of the modern steps, the dancers exercise everything except discretion.

One of our most popular war games is played with cubes numbered from one to six.

The nation's greatest running expenses are autos.

THE BURST BONNEVILLE BUBBLE

(The Bend Bulletin)
 The Bonneville bubble has burst. Administrator Raver admits that it is not feasible to bring his Columbia river power into Central Oregon. After years of oratory around here, after the deluge of propaganda, after last fall's campaign arguments, after nine months of PUD, after all that has been said concerning Bonneville in relation to Central Oregon we are now told that the recommendation is against building a line up from the Columbia river. The regretful thing is that this obvious fact could not have been admitted months ago. That, however, was of course not possible for had the admission been made, demagogues would have lacked argument, word for Bonneville spellbinders would have been lacking and politicians would have had to turn to issues on which they would find it harder to confuse the people.

With Bonneville out of the picture—in which it never belonged—the PUD faces a confused future. It has no formal Bonneville report on which it can set its own engineers to work. It can go into business only by building its own plants and lines—impossible because of the defense situation—or by buying out the existing company—equally impossible under existing conditions even though justification could be shown.

The district has funds on hand collected under last fall's unfortunate and unnecessary tax levy. There will be temptation to make use of them but with no place to put them save in a rate investigation. There is nothing, that is, for an engineer to do with respect to Bonneville power and new plants are out of the question. What about rates? Well, the subject is one the utilities commissioner handles. Maybe a way could be found to spend some PUD money on it in spite of the commissioner.

When Dr. Raver wrote about the preliminary report he definitely proposed a "final report" later. Obviously, he has delayed that final report hoping that an announcement would need power that Bonneville would be expected to supply. On that subject it was said here in discussing the preliminary adverse report that it has yet to be demonstrated that increased local power needs cannot be met by the present company. "A PUD board," we said, "interested in Central Oregon development, assessments, taxation and home rule will certainly give attention to that question if it is participating in decisions relating to such projects."

We ask readers interested in the future of Central Oregon and in government economy to consider those words and say where we are wrong.

The simple fact is that, whatever may be the rights or wrongs of the power situation elsewhere or the justification for the development of public power, here in Central Oregon special conditions obtain that call for special examination and treatment. Here there is a power island separated from other regions by wide areas of space wherein no business exists. If more power is needed here there must be new generating capacity developed somewhere. If at the Columbia river there must be transmission lines run up here at a high cost in money and material. The same money put into generating facilities up here would provide all needed power, effect an economy in public expenditure, create new values and maintain tax income.

Let those who have been talking Bonneville power now accept the situation developed by the Raver admission, view the facts realistically, stop their anti-power company agitation and begin on some constructive work for the Central Oregon community. If local rates are higher than they should be in view of investments and returns let attention be directed to them. These days there is too much else going on that is more important than keeping the community divided over false power issues.

WASHINGTON LETTER

By PAUL DUNHAM
 WASHINGTON, D. C., Sept. 13.—While less is heard in the national capital of the threatened rationing of gasoline in the Pacific northwest, it is beginning to be questioned whether Secretary Ickes was wise in his selection of an oil company official for acting petroleum coordinator. Ralph K. Davies, who holds this position, is not suspected of manipulating affairs to the advantage of the oil companies, although all the members of the commission and the entire personnel of the recently appointed subcommittee are men who hold executive positions with oil companies, and a majority of them are residents of New York city.

So far the rationing of gasoline has been a sorry failure; instead of decreasing the quantity used the effect has been exactly the opposite, and more gasoline is being sold today in the east than before the futile attempt at conservation was made. Sales at filling stations have increased enormously during the hours they are permitted to stay open, while the night closing has thrown thousands of men out of work. There is every reason to believe that a similar result would follow extension of the rationing order to the Pacific coast.

Railroad officials have stated, and have presented figures to prove the truth of their assertion, that there are plenty of tank cars lying idle on sidetracks to supply any part of the United States with an abundance of gasoline and fuel oil. If there should be an oil and gasoline shortage in the northwest the fault would be with government planning and the oil companies themselves, certain railroad officials have declared, and people who have seen long lines of tank cars standing idle on grass-grown sidetracks throughout the United States are inclined to agree with them.

WESTERN sugar beet growers and beet sugar factories are coming into their own despite the severe handicaps which have been placed upon them by the cane sugar division of the industry and it is expected that new beet sugar factories will be built in several places in the Pacific northwest where sugar beet growing tests have been carried on for several years. Because of being forced to compete with low-cost cane sugar the sugar beet industry has been of slow growth, but it has now attained the point where it supplies one-fourth of all the sugar consumed in the United States.

Because the cane sugar industry in Cuba is owned practically entirely by American interests the beet people have faced a powerful lobby in congress and in late years have been unable to secure reasonable increase in the quota allotted to them under the AAA program. Supplementing the activities of the cane people, too, has been the traditional policy of coddling Cuba inherited from the McKinley regime and the war with Spain. This influence is gradually lessening and the day may not be far distant when the beet growers will come into their own.

ONE result of employing Dutch metallurgists to operate the government financed tin smelter being built at Texas City, Texas, with funds supplied by Jesse Jones of Reconstruction Finance Corporation, himself a citizen of Texas, is an order by the Metals Reserve Co., an RFC subsidiary, to purchase 20,000 tons of tin from the Dutch East Indies. Heretofore the only tin ore under contract for the Texas smelter was 18,000 tons a year from Bolivia. The south American ore is of low grade and smelting it is more costly than the treating of the East Indies product. However, by mixing the two a fair quality is obtained and the cost of smelting reduced. The only question is whether the far east situation will remain peaceful long enough to permit delivery of the East Indies purchase.

THE charge frequently heard in past years that American munitions makers were agitators for war because of the excessive profits which they might reap, should be changed now to at least include the cigarette-makers in war-mongering accusations. For reasons which were obvious at the time—enormous quantities of cigarettes sent to soldiers and the suddenly developed addiction to smoking by women—the use of cigarettes leaped to unheard of heights following the last world war, by 1920 reaching a volume of fifty billion fags.

Cigarette smoking increased steadily in the ensuing years and in 1939 one hundred and sixty billion were being consumed annually in the United States. Members of the industry gloomily predicted that the saturation point had about been reached and no hope existed for further expansion. But by the middle of this year there had been a further increase of 13 per cent, in part attributable, perhaps, to extensive advertising in newspapers and over the radio.

New Church Building Will Be Year's Project for United Lutheran

Church Will Celebrate 15th Year

By MARGARET RAY

Register-Guard Church Editor
 Plans were made at a meeting of the United Lutheran church congregation this past week to sell the present church property on Thirteenth and High and to rebuild in a location where there will be room for expansion. Committees have been appointed and preliminary consideration of a building program started.

This forward step is in a sense a celebration of the church's fifteenth year of service in Eugene. The congregation was organized in October, 1920. Rev. Edwin Moll served the church for the first six months, after which the Rev. F. S. Beistel, D. D. took over the pastorate and served until his resignation in September, 1940. He continued to serve until the arrival of the present pastor, Rev. Edwin J. Johnson in June, 1941. The congregation pledged itself at this meeting to unitedly support the work of the church in the future.

DAVIS FARM SOLD

SHEDD, Sept. 13.—(Special)—Charles Davis has sold his house and acreage in the south part of town to Mr. and Mrs. Cortier. He plans to make his home in Albany.

Frank Starnes of Halsey has been doing some carpenter work for Charles Elder.

Mrs. Ada Collins of Morton, Wash., has been visiting Rev. and Mrs. Charles Bates.

Mr. and Mrs. Mudgett and children are home after a trip to California.

Recent winds and rain have done some damage to corn fields causing the corn to fall down. This will make cutting for ensilage more difficult. Some farmers still have grain to be combined. This has been slowed up by the wet weather.

L. N. Starnes purchased 30 head of ewes from Bert Minkley of Halsey. The sheep were brought here from Oakland, Ore.

Miss Katherine Pugh, daughter of Mrs. Lena Pugh of this place spoke over radio station KWIL on the sidewalk reporter's program recently.

Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Barton have gone to Sacramento, Cal., to visit Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Barton.

The Garden club met recently at the home of Mrs. Kenneth Robson. Each lady present was requested to tell three things that should be done in the garden now and how to do them. Refreshments were served by Mrs. Theodore Jensen. There were five members present.

Hallie Blankenship has returned to San Francisco after visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Blankenship.

L. G. Blankenship and sons, Arthur, Jim and John from Port Townsend, Wash., visited Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Blankenship, Tuesday, on their way to Pendleton.

BIRDS DON'T FLOCK
WARREN, Me.—(U.P.)—The adage "birds of a feather flock together" does not apply in the case of a robin in this village. The robin has nested on the veranda of a bird house occupied by two families of swallows.

FILES UP
HARPSVILL, Me.—(U.P.)—Though only 2 years old, "Cornie," a Florida-born cat owned by Mrs. L. H. Morgan of Harpsvill has traveled 5,000 miles. The cat is Mrs. Morgan's companion on her annual trips to and from Sarasota.

ODD JOKERS COLECTED
