'Broadway' On Heilig Screen

Broadway—most exciting and fabulous hub of fact and fiction in the world! Every city, almost every hamlet has its historic fascimile of the most noted of Broadway—New York's. It is the latter, during one of the most cataclysmic eras of its ceaseless mutations, with which "Broadway," the new Universal film hit, opening Sunday at the Heilig theater, concerns itself.

"Broadway," the film, is an exciting melodrama, both of story and of the fabulous days of "the roaring '20's" when prohibition and violence marked it for historic notoriety. Arrayed in its cast is a brilliant acting personnel headed by George Raft and Pat O'Brien as co-stars, and including Janet Blair, Brod Crawford, Anne Gwynne, Marjorie Rambeau and a host of others.

Unusual in its treatment of a basic plot which, as "Broadway," was a smash hit of the legitimate theater in the late '20's, the new Bruce Manning production is a dramatized biographical adaptation in which Raft is presented as George Raft, the film star. In it he re-lives a critically exciting slice of Broadway night club life which closely parallels his own career experiences when he was reputed to possess "the fastest dancing feet on Broadway."

Boy to be Holland

...actor of the movie will appear in person at the night club for one week Monday.

...appeared in many westerns appearing with Gene Autry, the Weavers, the Lone Ranger and Tex. Tex is the villain who stays out until the last reel.

and then it is he who "bites the dust." Tex has been killed eight times, and has been beaten up by the heroes at least 32 times. He has been thrown off stupendously high cliffs to the body-shattering rocks below, only to come back again to be all shot up in his next picture again.

Previously before going on tour Hall had one of the biggest and best cowboy entertaining troupes ever assembled and had many top-notch stars in his group.

Also on the same spotlight with the famous Hall will be Nora and Norman Perdue who will stage a strong arm and novelty act three times nightly along with the Hall show.

Playing for the week night dancing patrons will be Fred McKinney and his four-piece Hollandaire band with pretty Ruth Barton handling all of the vocals.

Spouse Lauds March's Role

"I believe he is as handsome as my husband was, after all."

Mrs. William H. Spence made that remark after meeting Fredric March for the first time on the Warner Bros. film set where he portrayed her late husband in the film version of her son's book, "One Foot In Heaven," now playing at the State theater.

The widow of the central character of "One Foot In Heaven" and mother of Hartzell Spence, author of the book, was in Hollywood visiting Iowa friends. Until she called at Warner Bros. to witness scenes from her own life being filmed, she'd never seen the inside of a movie studio or met a screen star.

In addition to March, Mrs. Spence met Martha Scott, her own impersonator in the film. She said Miss Scott flattered her in appearance, but despite the fact that March was her own choice for the role, she'd give him no better than an even break on looks with her husband, the late William Spence.

THINGS DON'T LOOK VERY GOOD for Dan Dailey Jr. as he tries to punch his way into Jean Roger's heart in "Sunday Punch," opening Wednesday at the McDonald theater.

Skelton Stars In 'Ship Ahoy'

Carrying on his successful career as a top comic and also a romantic hero, Red Skelton sings and wins the girl in M-G-M's musical, "Ship Ahoy," which opens at the McDonald theater Sunday, June 28. Eleanor Powell, Skelton and the Tommy Dorsey swing band head the stellar cast. Miss Powell is seen as a G-girl in the musical, with Skelton as her hypochondriac sweetheart. Both become involved with foreign agents, dangerous plots and hilarious mixups. The action takes place on a showboat bound for southern waters. Interspersed between the plot maneuvers are four elaborate production numbers in which the dancing star is featured in a Spanish bull-fight number, a Morse code tap, a novel soft shoe dance, and an Hawaiian War Chant.

Rex Returns Famed Comedy

"Stand back. I have three different deadly contagious diseases."

That's the dialogue with which Monty Woolley, portraying a world-famed literary lecturer, greets club-women gathered to meet him at the railway station in "The Man Who Came to Dinner," the famous comedy opening at the Rex theater on Thursday.

It's the dialogue, too, delivered at the very beginning of the film, which gives us the key to the man—a querulous, crotchety, but unbelievably witty man of the world who has dedicated his life to shocking conventional and fuddy-duddy people wherever he finds them.

He finds them in this instance in the persons of Billie Burke, a lion-hunting hostess, and her husband, Grant Mitchell, a pompous, middle-westerner who stand for everything that is anathema to Woolley.

McDonald Bills 'Tortilla Flat'

Brought to life on one of the most fascinating settings ever designed for a motion picture, John Steinbeck's best-seller novel, "Tortilla Flat," filmed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and starring Spencer Tracy, Hedy Lamarr and John Garfield, opens at the McDonald theater.

Accurately recreated to the last detail, the set includes a street two blocks long, with the paisano shacks under the pines. It covered an area of three acres. The set was built over a period of six weeks, after set designers and camera crews had gathered data and materials at Monterey.

One of the most unusual stories ever brought to the screen, "Tortilla Flat" deals with the happy-go-lucky life of the California paisanos who live a carefree existence on Tortilla Flat. Tracy, as Pilon, is the leader of a band of paisanos. The youngest and best looking is Danny, played by Garfield. Pilon's greatest admirer is Pablo, portrayed by Akim Tamiroff.

They are content until Dolores (Sweets) Ramirez comes to the flats and Danny goes to work because he loves her. Frank Morgan is seen in another memorable character from the book, the Pirate.

The film was directed by Victor Fleming, who directed "Gone With the Wind."

Some government officials estimate it will be early in 1944 before any rubber is released for civilian use, that is provided the war does not end before that time.
