U. S. National Bank Deposits Show Gain

The United States National Bank, which has one of its important units in this city, discloses in its statement of condition to the United States comptroller as of December 31, 1942, deposits totaling $294,702,266.84, which is an all time high. This compared with deposits of December 31, 1941 of $196,182,635.29 shows a deposit gain of over 98 millions. Resources in its latest current statement were $307,742,190.52 against $208,552,012.38 of just a year ago, a gain of over 89 millions.

As pointed out by officials of the bank, this is the first time in Oregon's history that the resources of any bank in this state reached the amazing total of 300 million dollars.

During the past year the capital structure of the United States National Bank underwent a change, one million dollars from earnings having been added to surplus, making capital and surplus equal a total of 10 million dollars, which, together with undivided profits and reserves, gives the bank a working capital of $12,392,482.90, which greatly broadens its loan capacity.

It is understood from the management of the local branch that the phenomenal gains over the past year not only reflect the war time industrial upheaval in the Portland area, but vitally stimulated activity throughout the state a large.
