At the McDonald:

HELLO, FRISCO, HELLO
This film employs Twentieth Century-Fox's time-tested formula No. 2 for successful musicals: liberal quantities of Technicolor and feminine beauty, a tight-roped set era setting, old songs that are a romantic part of the gaslight heritage, an unashamed tear, mostly fun.

"Hello, Frisco, Hello" runs tastefully true to form. Four singing-dancing entertainers—Alice Faye, John Payne, Jack Oakie, and June Haver—are making money in the honky-tonk along San Francisco's Barbary Coast. The path ahead for Alice and Johnny looks strewn with rosebuds until he is made Nob Hill-conscious by an impoverished blueblood, Lynn Bari. Needless to say, plenty of thistles spring up in the road before Johnny comes to his senses.

The story is relatively unimportant. On a par with "My Gal Sam" and "Alexander's Ragtime Band," it gives the customers all they are expecting to hear and see—and more.

Lynn Bari, who does not sing, is enticing June Haver to ideally cast in a comic role that co-features her with Jack Oakie, as a plaid-clad Humpty Dumpty. Laird Cregar has his second straight part in a red beard. John Payne is again adequate.

With only these, "Hello, Frisco, Hello," would be the smash hit that it is. Alice Faye provides the bonus attraction in her first role in almost two years. Thinner than when last seen in "Weekend in Havana," she puts emphasis on her voice instead of her legs, and proves herself one of the ace song pluggers in movies. Gone are the old facial contortions she used
