Franco Declared Preparing Way for Spanish Monarchy

By HENRY J. TAYLOR
NEA Correspondent

TANGIER—The fall of Mussolini and the disintegration of Fascism in Italy have left the government of Spain completely unruffled.

Observers abroad have reckoned that the big event in Italy must be a very discouraging omen for the regime of Dictator Francisco Franco. Actually, the impact on Franco of Mussolini's fall is exactly the reverse. Noticing the results of the Italian policy, the outcome now is regarded in Spain as proof of the Spanish leadership's wisdom.

With Italy now a battleground and Spain untrampled, any forecast of a parallel between the fall of Mussolini and an equivalent upset of Franco completely disappears.

There is a parallel, however, between this and other misconceptions of Franco's security. The monarchist movement, for instance, much dramatized from afar, takes on a different complexion within the country as well as here in Morocco, long regarded abroad as a monarchistic hotbed.

No Revolt in Prospect

Taboo in Spain are direct quotations from army men, but in talks with monarchist leaders in and out of the army, this conclusion is clear: The so-called, prospective revolt of the generals will not occur. That much is sure. The monarchist movement in which the generals are featured is not an anti-Franco movement.

In all Spain there is not a more strongly-declared monarchist than Franco himself. He never has represented his own position as a political pinnacle, and he always has proclaimed that he is only preparing the homeland for the monarchy to which he subscribed from the beginning. In Spanish officialdom, the monarchist issue realy is not disputed in principle, and the often-reported challenges of the generals is over-simplification in the sense that they are dramatized as a throwing down of the gauntlet to the dictator.

The cleavage does not involve a question of whether Don Juan should come back as a king for Spain, but when. Franco has been insisting on a prior reorganization of the state along lines which will take time before the installation of Don Juan. The latter, in turn, has published from Switzerland his objections to the prerequisites and the time required. However, their positions are not so irreconcilable but that Foreign Minister Francisco Gomez Jordana could become prime minister under a limited monarchy, and General Franco could retain his leadership of the army.

'Off Our Base'

Discussions with topmost monarchists in and out of the army, and including the most impatient advocates of monarchial restoration, show that we abroad have been off base in our sensationalism. There will be no palace revolution, no army uprising, no coup by generals in Spain or from Spanish Morocco. In fact, the leading monarchist generals are all professional soldiers and resent being made to appear as potential jail-keepers of their commander. And they say so with typical, oath-bound, officer-like bluntness.

The next big revolution in Spain will be a deflating of the irksome falange on one hand and a grassroots strengthening of Spain's cortes, or parliament, on the other. Except for the welfare work it does in some sections, the falange is unpopular everywhere.

The army doesn't like its amateurish tone; the poor don't like its petty graft; the rich dislike its personnel and its lack of tradition. Old-country Spain is made of 47 separatist provinces plus the intense individualism of each Spanish man and woman. The national patriotic society does not work well because it is essentially unsuited. So its prestige has lagged steadily until today the falange uses Franco less than Franco uses the falange.

Fired Brother-In-Law

Franco also knows that the falange is as much of a liability in the eyes of the United Nations as it is at home, and this news of his knowledge is good news for Spain. The only real sparkplug left in the falange is Ramon Serrano Suner, who kept it whirling on his prestige as foreign minister and as the generalissimo's brother-in-law. But when Franco fired pro-axis Suner—whom, incidentally, Franco has not seen since the firing—Suner's and the falange's eclipses were simultaneous.

On the other hand, the plans that Franco is making for the cortes are being well received by the best men throughout Spain. Its representation will include 50 mayors of various towns, 47 members elected (one each) by the provincial assemblies, 130 elected from trade unions, 14 from professional organizations such as the bar association, and 10 presidents of universities. It will have the power to originate every law and decree in Spain, and with no veto power from Franco.

The cortes under Estaban Balbao is attracting able men to the government, and in it centers the solution of Spain's internal dissatisfactions and external frictions. El Caudillo (the Leader) realizes this fully and is expected to back the cortes to the limit. In the power politics of Spain, this is his own answer to the problem of how to reverse Spain's outmoded preparations for a German victory on the continent and take advantage of a liberal order there.

ROOSTER SUGGESTION

LOS ANGELES—(U.P.)—With warworkers constantly claiming that crowing roosters are slowing down the nation's war production, the city council is equally constantly receiving suggestions from citizens how to abate the nuisance. The latest one comes from Venice, Cal., where the writer says he has invented a small board to attach to each rooster's head so that he cannot stretch his neck to crow. He offers to submit plans and specifications for the manufacture of the board.

Paper Wins Suit On Radio Listings

DENVER—(AP)—District Judge George A. Luxford has dismissed an injunction suit against The Denver Post seeking to compel it to publish listings of radio programs of station KFEL of Denver.

Judge Luxford cited an opinion stating that "a newspaper must remain free to publish such matters as it regards as possessing news value, and to refrain from publishing such matters as it may determine do not possess news value." Another opinion contained in the dismissal order said "if a newspaper were required to accept an advertisement it could be compelled to publish a news item."

In arguing against The Post's dismissal motion, attorneys for KFEL, an affiliate of the Mutual Broadcasting system, contended that omission of the listings from the newspaper's daily schedule of radio programs violated the Colorado unfair practices act.

With this contention Judge Luxford disagreed, saying the act applied to competitive business operations and that KFEL "is not a competitor of the Post Printing and Publishing company, defendant herein."

Attorneys for KFEL announced the dismissal order would be appealed to the state supreme court.
