Correspondent Spends Three Hours On Saipan Mountain

By MAC R. JOHNSON
United Press War Correspondent
WITH U. S. MARINES, Saipan, June 27.—(Delayed)—UP—1 spent three hours on the high, craggy crest of Mt. Tapotchau Monday.

During 70 minutes of that time I was pinned flat on my stomach in a shallow hole gouged from rock, while Japanese snipers wounded two nearby marines and killed one.

I wanted to see what breed of men had captured that peak, which serves as an observation post and commands the entire island.

Beachhead Bloody
They had fought their way from the bloody beachhead of Charan-Kanoo to the summit to 1,554-foot Tapotchau in 11 days, capturing the peak at 11 a. m. June 25.

These leatherneck assault forces had only one day of respite from fighting during that fierce 11-day campaign.

I hiked through sniper country to the crest June 26 with a group of eight stretcher bearers. We trudged over rock that cut through the composition soles of my marine combat shoes. Dirty, bearded and sweaty marines holding this precarious, exposed peak had dug in as well as possible on the stony crest.

A marine first lieutenant said his outfit assaulted the crest from the east. As the men reached the summit they spotted many Japanese moving to the top from the Garapan side of the mountain.

"We killed about 20 of them and drove off the rest," he said. "Then we spent all afternoon picking them off and ducking their rifle and machine gun fire."

Japs Try Bayonets
The first night the Japanese tried to infiltrate. They succeeded in inflicting some casualties on the Americans, but many enemy night prowlers were killed.

The Japs came armed with bayonets securely tied to the end of eight-foot bamboo poles and tree branches. They'd try to sneak up near a marine fox-hole and then jab into the hole, attempting to kill or wound the leathernecks.

Before the Japs on the lower forward ridge pinned us down with machine-gun and rifle fire which chipped the rocks around the hole I shared with five marines, I was able to view the northern end of Saipan with the naked eye.

That's where the final battle for Saipan will be fought. The terrain looks favorable for American tanks and the whole mountain crest gives us superb spotting for artillery or other types of observation.

Capture of the Mt. Tapotchau summit will greatly help the final phase of the Saipan fighting. Before its capture, the Japs could observe all American activities. Now we can observe theirs and the toughest, most rugged section of Saipan terrain is in our hands, although the northern and eastern slopes are not yet secured at this writing.

City Officials Arrested In Ogden Vice Cleanup
OGDEN, Utah, July 1.—UP—Five former Ogden city officials and a former commander of the American Legion in Ogden are among ten persons arrested today when the Weber county grand jury issued seven truebills as the first steps in an all-out anti-vice campaign.

Charges ranging from criminal conspiracy to conducting houses of prostitution are leveled at the ten in the grand jury's indictments.

Former Ogden Mayor Harmon W. Perry and former city Chief of Police Rial C. Moore were arrested on conspiracy charges and are also charged with permitting illegal gambling within the city limits. James Kallas, former American Legion commander in Utah's second largest city, is charged with criminal conspiracy.

A record of 20,000 passenger cars were handled in and out of one Montreal station of a Canadian railway during August, 1942.

Indians of Peru take only nine baths each year, and all of them in the month of November.
