Union Won't Budge On Recording Ban

WASHINGTON — (U.P.) — The American Federation of Musicians (AFL) again has refused to obey a war labor board directive to lift its ban on the making of transcriptions and recordings for the Columbia Recording Corporation, Radio Corporation of America and the National Broadcasting company.

Joseph A. Padway, counsel for James C. Petrillo, union president, said the union "cannot comply with the order of the board because in this case the war effort is not involved."

Padway accused the WLB of "starting a train of events to impose involuntary servitude upon us" in violation of the 13th amendment of the Constitution.

Teacher Counsels Polio Safeguards

Citing an article in Time magazine this week, which begins "The worst infantile paralysis outbreak since 1916 gripped the U. S. last week," Miss Marie Tinker, Eugene teacher, Friday offered precautionary suggestions to guard against the disease in local schools this fall. Physical fitness of the school child was the keynote of her statement.

"There are a good many cases in the state and some in our own community, although Oregon is not one of the states hardest hit yet," she said. "People, including many children, are traveling a great deal from state to state and so it is reasonable to think that there will be an epidemic in the west, unless some steps are taken to prevent it."

Continuing, she said:

"A month from now the opening of school will bring children together in large groups. As a teacher in Eugene, I am deeply concerned lest a situation similar to the one we faced last fall, or worse, exist, in our schools. Because of my concern, I venture to make a few suggestions to parents, which, if followed now, these next few weeks, might be of value.

"It is of great importance that your child come to school as nearly physically fit as possible. If he is underweight or anemic, or tires easily it would be well to have a doctor check him over and plan with you a "resistance to disease" program. Now is the time, also, as far as medical and dental services are possible, to have vision, hearing and dental defects cared for. At least make appointments for early fall.

"Summertime meals are apt to not be carefully planned and served regularly, yet if your child is to maintain a sturdy physique, such planning is of the greatest importance. Plenty of fruit juice and milk, should be included.

"Doctors are stressing the importance of rest. Days of work in the bean patch or orchard will not hurt a physically fit child if he spends the remaining hours in relaxation and getting long hours of unbroken sleep.

"If your child takes a lunch to work or picnic see that he has his own drinking cup and ask him not to exchange food (a popular custom) with his friends.

"If, by chance, when the opening day of school arrives, your child is not feeling well, has any possible symptoms of polio, won't you please keep him at home, no matter how eager he is to share the excitement of school opening? No teacher has time, the first few days of school, to check very thoroughly, the health status of children.

"It seems reasonable that all children who are in homes where cases of polio exist should be kept away from other children. Until we know more definitely than we do now, how the disease is spread, it is better to be overcautious than careless. Library and school books, that will be handled by others, should be withheld from homes where polio exists.

"Now is the time to keep children from congregating in large groups. One day this week children were lined up two or three abreast for nearly a block waiting for the afternoon show to begin. Maybe such situations cannot be avoided, but maybe they can.

"In the Oregonian for Aug. 16, are some other suggestions of importance."

At the McDonald:
THE WHITE CLIFFS OF DOVER

This is the story of a young American girl who came to England for a two-week vacation and stayed for a lifetime. Adapted from the book by Alice Duer Miller, it contains some of what press agents like to call "heart-warming drama," and some typical Hollywood fumbling.

Shortly after marrying Sir John Ashford, she sees him off to fight the first World war. After that he only has one four-day furlough before she receives news of his death. Afraid that the same fate might befall their young son, she plans to take him back to America, only to discover that they have both become so attached to England they cannot leave.

Theater patrons with Anglophobia (dislike and distrust of the British), of which there are many in the United States due to the large Irish and German elements in our population, may not be impressed with the fine old traditions of a country which knows how to live well, which is settled in its way of life. Englishmen, on the other hand, will probably object (when the film is shown abroad) to what may have been an intention to touch too lightly upon present economic conditions. However, manor houses and old castles are the essence of England to the average movie-goer, and he will probably be satisfied.

The film ends on the all-too-frequent "preserve the peace" note which is heard lately in many films.

Irene Dunne and Alan Marshall carry off the leads ably. Frank Morgan is the typical misunderstood and misunderstanding tourist. Also: Dame May Whitty and C. Aubrey Smith, Roddy McDowall.

Human drama; sometimes dull; often entertaining.

Building of $10,000 Home Ordered Halted

PORTLAND — (AP) — A contractor-owner well under way with construction of a $10,000 dwelling house has been ordered to stop work immediately by the war production board, which charged its regulations were violated.

C. T. Mudge, assistant WPB director here, said the order came from Washington, D. C., and recited that priorities and lumber conservation regulations (L-41 and L-335) were violated.

The builder, Joseph A. Hull, was forbidden to continue his work in any form, even make alterations to bring the cost of the dwelling within the $6,000 limit set by WPB.

Post-War Military Needs To Be Studied

WASHINGTON — (AP) — A study of army-navy post-war needs has been undertaken by a special house committee seeking to determine exactly how many planes, tanks, guns and trucks now on hand should be kept in service.

The group assigned to investigate post-war military policy decicded to conduct public hearings, starting next Tuesday, with army men to be heard first.

Rep. Wadsworth (R.-N. Y.), author of the resolution creating the committee earlier this year, said the members want to know what the services will consider "surplus property." Specifically, he added, they want to avoid either retaining too much or junking too much.

The consideration of surplus property problems is a new field for the committee headed by Rep. Woodrum (D.-Va.). Previously it has studied possible merger of the armed forces and related problems.

The house itself, meanwhile, resumed consideration of legislation laying down methods for selling many billions of dollars worth of war products and the plants which made them.

State's Production Of Cheese Drops

PORTLAND, Ore. — (U.P.) — Oregon's cheese production dropped 5 per cent in 1943 and butter was down 11 per cent compared to the previous years, the United States department of agriculture has revealed.

Reason for the cheese reduction was the drop in the amount of cream received, with American cheese showing a 16 per cent decrease. Creamery butter production totaled 26,547,000 pounds in 1943, 3,289,000 pounds less than the previous 12 months.

Ice cream production was up 1 per cent while the output of unsweetened skimmed, condensed milk dropped 68 per cent to only 1,334,000 pounds.
