N. Y. Sugar Research Director At U. of O.

New industrial uses for sugar that will aid the postwar market for the product will be discussed by Dr. Robert C. Hockett of New York, scientific director of the Sugar Research Foundation, at a conference with Dr. Orlando John Hollis, acting president of the University of Oregon, Tuesday.

Dr. Hockett, who recently announced research awards made by the foundation totaling more than a quarter of a million dollars to various colleges and universities, will also discuss with Dr. Hollis the research facilities of the University of Oregon, and will explore the possibility of assisting in its research program.

The Sugar Research Foundation is supported by some of the outstanding members of the beet and cane sugar industry. One of its principal objectives is the sponsorship of scientific research on sugar at leading universities and other laboratories in chemistry, biochemistry, microbiology, and medicine, both pure and applied. The role of sugar in the diet is also the subject of considerable interest and research by the foundation.

Independent candidates if a record of the convention proceedings, together with the names and addresses of 250 or more qualified electors participating in the convention are duly filed with the secretary of state not later than 45 days before the November election.

Arrangements for the convention are being worked out by a committee under the leadership of R. D. Snyder, Portland.
