Brazil-U. S. Amity Held Unchanged

By JAMES J. WHITE

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Viewers-with-alarm who bemoan the recent resignation of Brazil's foreign minister, Oswaldo Aranha, as a body blow to Brazilian friendship with this country are barking up the wrong tree.

This is the word from Latin-American experts in the U. S. government. These officials insist, basically, that there is no tree, so why bark?

Aranha, staunch friend of the U. S. and former ambassador here, resigned after he had gone to address a meeting of the Society of Friends of America, a pro-United States organization of which he had been named vice president, and found the place closed by government order.

He chose to interpret this as a personal slap and resigned as foreign minister after demanding some sort of satisfaction, however small, and receiving none.

Political Barnacles

Word from Brazil, however, indicates that the society had picked up some political barnacles in its two-year career, which involved it in domestic Brazilian political cross currents.

One of these cross currents flows from Gen. Eurico Gaspar Dutra, Brazilian minister of war, who hates communism and claims that some of the political hangers-on of the society were communists. At the same time he is said to have no particular affection for Aranha.

Actually, claim informed quarters in Washington, friendship in Brazil for this country rests largely in the person of President Getulio Vargas. Certain aspects of Vargas' administration may not satisfy a lot of Americans when it comes to democratic practices, but the record shows that Vargas has steered his country consistently along a course of active friendship to this country.

Certain elements in the Society of Friends of America had been agitating for immediate elections, which Vargas has promised for after the war. The word here is that when Aranha identified himself too closely with this group he got stepped on.

This is sad in a way, it's held, but in no way affects Brazil's policy of cooperation with Uncle Sam, nor does it preclude Aranha's making a political comeback later on.

The calamity-forecasters err on still another angle, say people on the inside here. This alarm is that Aranha was eased out because fascist elements in the Brazilian army were getting together with fascist elements in Argentina and some day would split Latin-America into two camps, one of which would very definitely be aligned against Uncle Sam and all he stands for.

This just simply can't be, it's insisted here. Brazil's army, under Dutra, has been largely equipped with American weapons and her factories have been afforded American equipment. Brazilian troops have gone into action in Italy.

Argentina Starts to Arm

Meanwhile Argentina, last of the Latin-American nations to break relations with the axis—and then only under pressure—has begun to arm herself and make belligerent motions toward her neighbors.

Brazilians are inclined to regard Argentinians as their natural enemies. The possibility that any Brazilian officers would plot with Argentine officers against their own country is laughed at here by people who know both countries.

One of the most significant things about this coalition rumor, it's pointed out, is that it originated in Argentina, not in Brazil. The theory here is that Argentinians are merely trying to blow up an internal Brazilian squabble into something with which they can make hemispheric hay when the tide is running against them.

Brazil's ambassador in Washington, Carlos Martins, sums the affair up:

"Aranha's exit does not change our relationship with your country one iota—no more than the change in your own state department (the resignation of Undersecretary Welles) last year affected my country. That change was your own business and we accepted it as such. This one is Brazil's."

Belgians Kill Own Officer

ANTWERP, Belgium— (U.P.) — Belgian partisans are trigger-happy. They shoot first, ask questions afterward. As a result, they killed one of their own officers, youthful, well-beloved Francis Cogelf, who had 16 villages under his command.

Cogelf was behind the German lines. Having accomplished his mission, he stole a German automobile. His partisans saw it coming, saw its insignia, blazed away. Then they inspected the wreckage and found his body.

So they put the body in a coffin, sent for a priest, dug a grave at the side of a church. Then across the Albert canal came a German patrol. The partisans grabbed up their rifles and Tommy guns. Allied officers, at the patriot's bier as mourners, radioed for tanks.

In a matter of minutes, 20 tanks lumbered up and the Germans departed. The funeral procession fell in behind them, even as they spat explosive shells. As the running battle continued, a priest recommended the soul of Francis Cogelf to its maker.

This is a spark plug

Your car yells "gimme a light" about 5400 times a minute. And the spark plugs must deliver a "light" right on the split instant.

Here's what happens.

When the plugs flick a spark into compressed mixture of gasoline and air in the cylinders... ZOWIE! There's a white hot explosion. The only things movable in the cylinders are the pistons. So down they go, turning the crankshaft, which turns the gears, which turn the wheels, which roll you to wherever you are going.

Those 5400 explosions per minute give spark plugs a Turkish Bath that boils the sparking ambition clear out of 'em after about 10,000 miles.

That's bad, because weakened plugs waste the gasoline they're supposed to explode. It's like pouring precious gasoline into the gutter!

Here's where your friends at Shell come to the rescue. They'll clean your spark plugs, or sell you new ones if the old ones have cracked (as they sometimes do). And they'll also Shellubricate your entire car for you.

You need SHELLUBRICATION because it protects your car against Wartime Stop and Go wear—the villain that sends 10,000 cars to junk yards every week!

FOR THE LADIES... Shell has a FREE and amusing little booklet, Alice in Motorland. It's the Facts of Life about your car. Tells you how to keep it from going haywire before its time. Get your copy at any Shell pump.
