Neither Roosevelt Nor Dewey To Receive Votes On Nov. 7

By CHARLES B. DEGGES
 WASHINGTON—Neither Franklin D. Roosevelt nor Thomas E. Dewey will receive a single, solitary vote for the presidency on Nov. 7, no matter how much campaign oratory they may deliver and no matter how many million Americans go to the polls on that date.

The voting on Nov. 7 will be just one of a series of steps necessary to elect a president. The real "election" will take place on Dec. 18, but the votes cast on that day will not be officially counted until Jan. 6—just 14 days before the winner is inaugurated.

The basic procedure for electing a president is set down in the constitution itself, while the details of that procedure are provided for in national and state laws.

Votes Go for "Electors"
 Here, step by step, is the way Roosevelt or Dewey will be elected this year:

1. The nation's voters, qualified by state law, troop to the polls on Nov. 7 ostensibly to "vote for Roosevelt" or to "vote for Dewey." Actually, however, they'll be voting for the "electors" on the democratic or republican ticket. The date is set by congress which, by law, provided that the general election day be "the first Tuesday after the first Monday in November," while the Constitution fixes the number of electors in each state as "equal to the whole number of senators and representatives" each has in congress.

2. The state executives, "as soon as practicable" after election day, will prepare an official certificate of the state's electors named in the general election. This certificate will be sent "by registered mail" to Secretary of State Hull. Six duplicates of the certificate will be sent to the state's electors.

3. The electors chosen on Nov. 7 will meet in their respective states on Dec. 18 in accordance with a national law which convenes them on "the first Monday after the second Wednesday in December" next following their appointment.

Each state's electors will meet at a place determined by the state legislature, generally in the state capital, and cast their votes for either Roosevelt or Dewey for president, and in a separate ballot, for Harry S. Truman or John W. Bricker, for vice president.

Follow National Law
 As soon as the electors cast their ballots, they will prepare six certificates of their votes, each certificate containing two "distinct lists," one of the votes for president and one of the votes for vice president. To each certificate, the electors will attach one of the official lists of electors furnished to them by their state executives. The certificates and lists then will be sealed in envelopes.

Stage, has arrived at an overseas station on an island in the central Pacific.

Luftwaffe Baked By Lack Of Fuel

WASHINGTON—The Luftwaffe now has more aircraft than when Hitler sent it against Poland in 1939, Gen. H. H. Arnold said, but it is grounded for lack of gasoline and oil.

The commanding general of the United States army air forces said that the non-flying status of the Nazi warplanes resulted from carefully planned and boldy executed allied attacks on their sources of supply, their communications and their storage places.

Germany's present productive capacity for synthetic fuels, he told a meeting of the Wings club, is down to 30 per cent of normal. Much of the petroleum it had hoped to use is in Norway and Greece—cut off by lack of communications—and in pipelines and storage places where it cannot be used.

He said that the fuel shortage led the Germans first to reduce training, then to cut out miscellaneous missions, next to cut flying by "brass hats" and finally to end training altogether, so that in addition to a lack of fuel there is also now a shortage of pilots.

Later, in answer to a question, Gen. Arnold asserted that "of course" the B-29 Superfortress operations against Japan have been worth while.

"Some day they will be flying over Japan in the same numbers that B-17's now are flying over Germany and then you won't ask me that question," he said. In addition to his overall AAF command, Arnold heads the 20th air force which flies the B-29's on a worldwide assignment.
