ROME, Nov. 13.—(AP)—British armored forces of the 8th army, driving north along Italy's Adriatic coast, advanced to within a mile and a half of Ravenna today after crossing the Ghiala canal.

The tank-supported troops were moving toward the inland port along the Montone river, which skirts the southwest edge of the city.

Other British forces were continuing the slow drive northwest of Forli, on the Bologna-Rimini highway, and the communiques said the Germans were putting up "very strong resistance."

Front reports said the heaviest fighting was taking place near a bend in the canal one mile north of Forli. The Germans made several strong counterattacks in the area, but were beaten back and forced to flee, leaving considerable motor transport equipment behind.

The 5th army front still was confined to patrolling, although two or three German planes made several sorties over the sector, bombing and strafing highways and forward installations.

Allied heavy bombers meantime attacked four rail bridges on the Brenner pass line in northern Italy, while tactical planes raided military objectives and communication targets in the Po valley, just behind the battlefield.

tionally sounded like a poor imitation of Hitler's, was based almost entirely on an attempt to preserve the German nation from its inner and other enemies, which Hitler claimed his national socialist movement accomplished in 1933.

He charged the allies directly with instigating the plots against his life in the "one hope that they could deliver a decisive stab in the interior of our country as was always the case when they did not know how to achieve successes against Germany in another way."

Hitler's proclamation said the plotters hoped to break German resistance at its root by striking at him, and he added: "As long as I am alive, Germany will not suffer the fate of European states which have been overrun by bolsheviks, as long as there is a breath left in me, my body and my soul will serve only one thought—to make my people strong in defense and attack against the most mortal peril that is threatening it."

The proclamation indicated the nazis possibly were contemplating another blood purge. It recalled that the ranks were cleansed in the 1934 revolt and after the July 20 attempt on Hitler's life, warning: "Whoever today uses a dagger or bomb against Germany will be destroyed without mercy and without consideration. . . . The time for people who like to make compromises or reservations is definitely over."

The Stockholm Morgon Tidningen said the clandestine Atlantic radio reported that 4,000,000 copies of a proclamation by Himmler appointing himself "the new German fuhrer" had been printed and were ready in Berlin for fast distribution the moment Hitler no longer was able to exercise power.
