Christmas Bazaar Planned By League
Scheduled for Thursday, Dec. 7, the Allied Arts league Christmas bazaar, held by art students at the University of Oregon in the court and art gallery of the allied arts building on the campus, will have several interesting features this year.

A large Christmas tree, decorated by the students, will hold the center of the court. Christmas chorals will be played by an instrumental trio while patrons make their selections.

Students will also depict "art in action," in which they may be seen in the actual processes of creating such articles as are offered for sale.

Originated about eight years ago by the late Lance Hart, the Christmas bazaar offers articles made by students and faculty of the art school for sale to the public. Ten per cent of the money is given to maintain the Allied Arts league and the rest is for the artist.

Examples of the original Christmas presents offered include water colors, paintings, drawings, lithography, ceramics, metal jewelry, sculpture, weaving, Christmas cards, and gaily decorated boxes. The latter are filled with candy and nuts by the students.

The show will open at 4 p.m. Dec. 7 and continue until 7:30 p.m. Drusilla Johnson, chairman, announces.
