

Greece Facing Another Crisis

ATHENS, Jan. 18.—(AP)—A new crisis threatened troubled Greece today as ELAS-hating Gen. Stylianos Gonatas announced he soon would be named governor-general of Macedonia and Thrace, ELAS strongholds.

one of the sharpest blows yet delivered against the rebellious left-wing ELAS by Premier Gen. Nicholas Plastiras, with whom Gonatas was associated in a 1922 revolution.

Greek government circles for three hours yesterday denied categorically that Gonatas would get the post, but later Plastiras said "No decision has been made," indicating that Gonatas at least was being considered for the job.

(A London broadcast said Plastiras had announced the appointment of Gonatas as governor-general of Macedonia.)

It was understood that Gonatas made his announcement without prior knowledge of the British embassy, which may yet exert sufficient pressure to block the appointment on grounds that it might provoke further incidents.

The development came as ELAS and government delegates prepared to begin peace negotiations under a truce in the Greek civil war arranged by Lt. Gen. Ronald Scobie, British commander in Athens.

Harold MacMillan, British minister for the Mediterranean area, and Marshal Sir Harold R. L. G.

Alexander, allied commander for the area, visited Regent Archbishop Damaskinos last night and Greek sources said the Britons pressed for immediate convocation of the peace conference.

The Greek government, however, was reported insisting that the negotiations must await the complete withdrawal of ELAS forces from pre-designated areas, scheduled to be completed Jan. 24.

Cure Of Alcoholics Symposium Topic

Alcoholics are sick people, not criminals, and need medical rather than penal treatment, in the opinion of the Yale university scientists who are studying the problem, members of the Eugene high school Parent-Teacher association and the guests were told at a symposium in the high school library Wednesday night.

State Rep. Truman Chase, Dr. Victor P. Morris, dean of the University of Oregon school of business administration, and Mrs. Nora Robertson of the Eugene high faculty, who attended a Pacific coast conference in Portland Nov. 27 to Dec. 1 regarding the Yale studies, discussed the conference and answered questions at Wednesday night's meeting. Laurence Moffitt, county school superintendent, acted as chairman.

Dr. Morris placed emphasis on the educational approach to the problem of alcoholics, commenting that it is a more fundamental approach and that other attempts at handling addicts have not been successful. Solution of the problem, he said, must depend on two things: careful scientific study of the effect of alcohol on the reactions of the individual, and knowledge of the type and complexity of the society in which the individual must live.

Dr. Morris stated his opinion that more study should be given to the effect of moderate drinking, and that the moderate drinker, who has had just enough to make him very sure of his abilities, while actually the alcohol has slowed down his reactions is society's biggest menace.

Rep. Chase defined the alcoholic as one who has developed the liquor habit so badly that he no longer can help himself.

Chase described methods of attempted cure which are being used now, placing particular emphasis on the 12-step plan of Alcoholics Anonymous, an organization of rehabilitated alcoholics. He stated that the proposal has been made for construction of a clinic in Oregon for publicly financed treatment of the addict.

Mrs. Robertson reported that the scientists making the Yale studies had found three large barriers to such objective research: (1) that society regards alcoholism as not a disease but a crime, (2) that society believes it knows everything about the problem and that people laugh at drunks as they used to laugh at the antics of insane persons and (3) that many people think present-day cures much more successful than they are.

Main causes of drinking, Mrs. Robertson said, were found to be (1) escape from pressing problems, (2) loss of control after starting merely to be "one of the gang," for business, recreational and social purposes, and (3) psychotic reasons—drinking to meet one problem that seems overwhelming.

The studies report there is little help for the senile, confirmed alcoholic. However, people who drink to escape unendurable pain and young people who drink to show defiance of authority can be reached.

Educators View Study Of Biology

Dr. Elmo N. Stevenson, director of science education, Oregon State college, was in Eugene Wednesday afternoon to confer with biology teachers of Eugene and University high schools regarding the proposed state course of study in biology and to suggest possible revision of the course in Eugene.

The present trend in biology study, which is reflected in the course suggested for local schools, is toward socializing the subject, with emphasis upon the relationship of man to plant and animal life, and moves away from the technical aspects which have been emphasized in the past, Dr. Stevenson reported.

Another change which he suggested particularly for this region would be to place emphasis on conversation and vocational pursuits in connection with plant and animal life. Such study would be useful in the industries of this area—lumbering, plant culture, game management and similar work, he pointed out.

For the remainder of this term, Eugene's two high schools will use the course of study which is proposed for the state, and will make suggestions as to changes which their experience indicates need to be made.

Stanley Williamson, principal of University high school; Dean Mickelwait, principal of Eugene high; and Mrs. Nora Robertson, Mrs. E. H. Collins, Mrs. Clarence Hines, Miss Ruth Hopson, Miss Margaret DuVos, Henry Kuchers and Duane Mellem, teachers of biology, attended the meeting, at Eugene high school.

Call Expected Soon On Surgical Dressings

From now on, for some time, work in surgical dressings for the Red Cross here will be "pressure work," reports Mrs. Joseph H. Jackson, chairman, and "women doing this work are asked to stand by awaiting notices in the paper as to when the work begins."

A letter from Norma Preston Bartlett, deputy administrator, volunteer special services, Pacific area office, San Francisco, this week to Mrs. Jackson states:

"We are, as you see, assigning to you a quota of 72,000 4-by-8 sponges, and it is required that these are made and shipped one month from the date of receipt, as this is obviously an emergency order. This material should be available for shipment this month, which means it should reach you early in February, and it is entirely possible that we will have a similar assignment for the following months."

"We do not know when this material comes to make these dressings, but when it comes we have just one month to put out 72,000, so it means we are going to have to call on all workers to turn out and help," Mrs. Jackson said. Arrangements have been made to allow two women to work together on dressings, if they choose to do so.

This order of 72,000 will be only one of many "pressure jobs" looked for in future months as the Red Cross calls on its volunteer workers to help out.
