February Sky Review Given

By J. HUGH PRUETT
Astronomer, General Extension
Division, Univ. of Oregon

The "full-stared skies which winter knows" are with us still and present a glorious spectacle whenever the air is clear. Although the moon is now in the evening sky, its brightness is not sufficiently strong to interfere with the study of the planets and bright stars. Let us observe them around 8 p. m.

In the west, the gorgeous planet Venus gleams like a little lantern hung on the wall of heaven. Venus' intense brilliance far exceeds that of any other star-like object in the entire sky. What the nights would be, were the blue above us dotted with hundreds of such splendors! Were we transported to some planet in the war-away Hercules globular cluster where 100,000 suns are so crowded together that "only" trillions of miles separate any two instead of quadrillions or more as in our present region of space, we should surely find Venus-bright stars in great profusion.

Almost due south and well up in the sky, the splendid combination of stars outlining Orion, the Hunter, are conspicuous. A short line of three, of equal brightness, form Orion's belt. Two brighter stars higher up mark his shoulders. The one to the left, Betelgeuse, has a reddish orange tint. Below the belt, glittering Rigel marks the hunter's shoe buckle.

Lower and farther east than Orion, there flashes the brightest star in the sky, Sirius, the famous dog-star. (Planets are not stars. Sirius is the nearest star seen from our part of the world, being only nine light-years distant.)

Directly overhead, bright, yellow Capella is twinkling. At a considerable distance down toward the southeast from Capella—yet high in the sky—another twinkler is found, Procyon.

Almost between Capella and Procyon an object is seen which does not twinkle. This is none other than the planet Saturn noted for its splendid ring system. The moon will be fairly close to Saturn the evening of February 21, the earlier in the evening, the nearer.

Well above the horizon and almost due east, bright Regulus shines. This star is at the end of the handle of the Sickle, a formation of stars quite easily picked out.

Those who are sometimes puzzled by the antics of the well-known Big Dipper may well wonder at its present position, for it is now, in the northwest, precariously balanced on the end star of its handle.

By February 20 or 21 the moon will be far enough from the Pleiades that this charming cluster of six or seven little stars in the form of a tiny dipper may be seen very high in the sky south-west of overhead.

The huge planet Jupiter, second only to Venus in brilliance, will be rising between 9 and 10 p. m. almost due east for those whose horizons are not blocked by hills or other obstructions.

Jeannette Elaine Kitchen Jeannette Elaine Kitchen, 16-month-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Nevel Kitchen of 390 River Road, died Saturday at a Portland hospital. She was born Oct. 8, 1943, at National City, Calif., and had lived in Eugene only for the past seven and a half months. Besides her parents, she is survived by three sisters, Tina, Lola, Vivian and Judy Ann; her grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. A. L. Hodgson of Eugene; Mrs. Connie Westbrook of Pelahatche, Miss.

Funeral services will be held Tuesday at 2 p. m. at the Poole-Larsen mortuary. Rev. Ira J. Sandusky will officiate, and burial will be in Rest Haven Memorial park.

Inquiries Continue Although his book, "The American Method of German Grammar," has been off the market ever since he left the University of Minnesota in 1939 to accept a position with the University of Oregon, Dr. George Frederic Lusky, professor of Germanic languages and literature and head of the department, still receives inquiries about the book.

Last week he received a letter from Dr. W. E. Ekblaw, the editor of "Economic Geography" and professor at Clark university, Worcester, Mass., saying "I have just seen a copy of your 'American Method of German Grammar' and because I am so favorably impressed with it I write to you directly in the hope of reaching you and learning where I may obtain copies of your very excellent book."

The book in question was written by Dr. Lusky to meet the demands of graduate students who wished to acquire a reading knowledge of German in the fastest possible time.
