LA JUNTA CLUB MEETING FRIDAY

LaJunta Bridge Club is to meet Friday for one-thirty dessert at the home of Mrs. Daisy R.

Zonta Club Honors Mrs. Roy Woodruff

Eugene Zonta Club International, paid high honor to Mrs. Roy Woodruff, president of the auxiliary to the local American Legion post, Wednesday evening, by presenting her with a citation for outstanding service to the community. The award was based not on her present office, but on more than twenty years' endeavor in community projects. The citation stated: "Her ability to give of her self to the community in every worthy project; her ability to organize thinking and action; her alertness to community needs and quick response to meet the need; her stabilizing influence and enormous capacity for work with no task too menial; her personality which radiates confidence and inspiration—these are qualities which to this organization epitomize the highest type of service."

Mrs. Woodruff, it was stated, has headed innumerable drives as a volunteer worker and organizer. She has served the American Red Cross in several capacities, such as on membership drives and hospital committees. Currently, she is engaged as general chairman of women's patriotic bodies to organize for the sponsorship of the ticket sale of the Gleemen's spring concert in May, which will be for the benefit of the Veterans' Memorial building fund.

A gift of glassware and a corsage accompanied the citation award, which came to Mrs. Woodruff as a complete surprise.

Mrs. F. S. Fulwiler presided at the dessert meeting, at which guests were entertained. Mrs. Genevieve Turnipseed introduced John Pennington, speaker for the occasion.

FBI Discussed

Mr. Pennington talked upon the Federal Bureau of Investigation, telling how closely it is organized from the desk to the director, J. Edgar Hoover, in Washington, D. C., so that he can at any time contact any one of the four-thousand-or-so agents in any part of the country within a period of ten or fifteen minutes. Maps on the wall show the location of each man, and a teletype which connects with every field office is available, by which agents may be summoned. Fifty-seven field offices are located in strategic large cities of the nation. Agents are required to report to field offices every two hours, and must at all times keep the office informed of their whereabouts. If one enters a theater, he leaves his name, location of his seat, etc., at the box office; if he boards a train, the name of the train, the number of the car and of his seat, as well as his destination, must be on file at his field office headquarters, where such data is kept in a card index.

The front page of every telephone directory in every city of the United States, the speaker remarked, carries directions on how to contact the FBI.

Only two types of men are eligible to this service; lawyers and accountants. The qualifications are that he must be between 25 and 35, be a graduate of an accredited law school or a university graduate in accounting with two years' actual experience beyond the classroom. Physical education also is stressed in the intensified training which agents receive, as well as crime detection details.

Director Praised

High tribute to the director was paid by the former investigator, who declared that all the thousands of agents hold Mr. Hoover in highest esteem. The publicity which the bureau head receives is of great value and help to the agents, he declared, in that Mr. Hoover's name is well known in all parts of the nation.

During the war, there were approximately 5500 agents in the FBI system, and it is a matter of pride, Mr. Pennington said, that not one case of sabotage by foreign agents was carried through successfully, although several were perpetrated by American sympathizers of enemy countries. "The safety of the government is in good hands," he stated. As a measure of FBI efficiency, he cited that within thirty-six hours of the Pearl Harbor incident, every Japanese on the Pacific coast was in custody. "The FBI has the address of every enemy suspect in the United States," he declared.

Guests of Zonta Club included, besides Mr. and Mrs. Pennington and Mrs. Woodruff, Mrs. Ross Beeson, Mrs. Edna M. Stokes, Mrs. Alda Stilwell, Miss Elizabeth Richard, Miss Iva Vandenberg, Miss Alta Mae Fields and Mrs. Frank J. Connell.
