Scientific Bogeymen

The House Rules Committee has received warning that "the peace and security of the United States is definitely in danger" from the activities of certain scientific societies. This dire alarm was raised by Ernie Adamson, chief counsel of the House Un-American Activities Committee. It was passed on to the public by Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, another committee member.

The report which carried this warning was a masterpiece of innuendo. Its source was the testimony of Army security officers at Oak Ridge, Tenn., officers of the scientific societies, and others. Its purpose was to stall congressional action toward putting atomic energy under civilian control. Its overtones were ominous, as they doubtless were intended to be.

But when you put the accusations down in print, they look considerably less dire. Scientific and engineering personnel, separated from government service on the atom bomb project, have organized small groups in various cities which "continue to co-operate with scientific societies whose headquarters are located inside the reservations at Oak Ridge," it is charged.

It is further charged that the Oak Ridge societies are made up of "young men who are classified as scientific researchers and engineers," and that their purpose is to create "some form of world government" and support international civilian control of manufacture of atomic materials.

Also it is charged that these young men are opposed to Army supervision of Oak Ridge, that they have communicated with persons outside the United States and that (horrors!) they intend to keep on doing so.

One is evidently supposed to read between the lines and discover that the accused are conspiring in their various scientific cells to give away atomic bomb secrets to Russia. But the evidence presented is scarcely capable of filling one with immediate terror as to the country's peace and security.

The formation of scientific societies and the exchange of scientific information are old and honored customs, and envisioned in the future international development of atomic resources.

"Some form of world government" is advocated by a good many wise and distinguished persons, including former Supreme Court Justice Owen Roberts.

The reasonable notion of international civilian control of atomic research and industry is backed by, among others, the President of the United States.

Objection to Army supervision is neither new nor criminal. And if communicating with persons outside this country is wrong in the eyes of congressional investigators, then several million Americans had better start quaking in their boots.

One wonders what Mr. Adamson, Mr. Thomas and Rep. John S. Wood, the Un-American Activities Committee chairman, favor doing with the men who helped work the atomic miracle. Do they consider all scientists suspect? Would they keep these men incommunicado at Oak Ridge? Do they think that the government has no concern with keeping atomic secrets and guarding our security, and that the whole burden must fall upon the doughty witch-hunters of Wood-Rankin Committee?

The whole thing would be laughable if it were not an insult to the accused. Fortunately, it is not likely that these porous hints of treason will frighten many of the investigators' colleagues into supporting the weakening and generally unpopular fight for military control of atomic energy.

OUT OF THE WOODS

By JIM STEVENS

Headrig King

By JIM STEVENS

If you were to set forth to tell the story of America's job of the year—house-building—where would you start? Hundreds of material items and as many professions and trades go into the new house. A story of the house could begin with any one of them. As for me, I'd start in one of the country's 40,000 sawmills. I'd set the scene and put my hero in it this way:

The morning whistle boomed over the acres of millhouse, sheds and yards of the Great West Lumber Company (sawing capacity—enough board feet per eight hours to supply lumber for 15 average homes). Rain clouds were rolling in from the North Pacific, and the morning was wet and dark. In the sawmill lights blazed over every machine.

Saw steel glittered from trimmer, edger, resaw and slasher, as the sharp teeth of circulars and bands bit and ripped through boards, cants and alabs. The screams of the monster saws, the rumble of live rolls bearing timbers, and the steady thunder of machines were like an uproar of battle.

At the headrig stood Eagle Eye Hawley, the king of it all, the main man of the sawing floor of the mill—the head sawyer. It was just another day for him; of sawing wood; of making lumber for another 15 homes.

Scattered all over the country, even amid the cornfields of Iowa, were some 40,000 others of Hawley's breed and trade sawing wood for houses. Home in a Tree.

The Great West's head sawyer was off to a tough start. A log of Douglas fir seven feet through and forty long was on the carriage. Its end had a bulls-eye of "conk," a symptom of extreme old age in the tree. Other characteristics gave the log individuality in the eagle eye of the headrig king. Hawley had been sawing for 25 years but he had never, he declared, "seen two logs alike."

In split-second timing the sawyer had to fix a pattern through his survey of the log. The pattern took shape according to the items and grades of the lumber orders posted on the headrig board. The pattern was also shaped to make the most of the "uppers," the finest grades in the log.

Deep bark. Thin sapwood. Plenty of solid layers before the bandsaw should cut into the coarse grain and knots of the heartwood. Flooring, siding, finish, dimension for framing, boards for sheathing and form lumber—the log held all that stuff of homes, and much more.

Other logs of the old, old Douglas fir tree were on the deck. They amounted to more than 15,000 board feet. A home in a tree, a bigger-than-average home.

The 50-foot bandsaw was spun at ten thousand feet a minute on an upper wheel ten feet in diameter and by another under the headrig floor. The sawing space was between the two wheels. Eagle Eye Hawley sort of walked the log carriage up to the silver flash of ripping steel, then drove it through. A giant screamed. A slab three feet wide and forty long dropped like a slice of bread from a knife. A log carriage came to a sharp halt. Reversed, it was raced backward. Then the sawing went on . . . from a tree in Oregon . . . for a home in Brooklyn.

Balloon-Tire Sawmill

Many more board feet a day than in such 150,000-foot outfits as the Great West. Many are the mills with two-man crews. But in every case the sawyer is king. In 1941 he and his high and mighty tribe were the key men in keeping 350,000 carpenters supplied with lumber for cantonment building, the foundation of the defense and war effort. They are key men still, in the housing crisis.

Farmers in the Douglas fir country own a million acres and more of forests. Small sawmills of many varieties are cutting firm timber for housing and other urgent lumber needs. One is a trailer sawmill on balloon tires that is employed in the way of the accustom hay balier or threshing machine. It travels at 45 miles per hour on the open road, can be set up in 30 minutes and knocked down in 15.

I've heard it said that the operators won't hire sawyers for these jobs unless they can show records of service as tank-punchers. I'm not saying, but it could be so.

Anyhow, in big mill or little one, the king of the headrig in the Douglas fir is home-maker to America.

WAR BRIDES TO HOLD SECOND GATHERING

All overseas brides of the community and county, from Britain, France and elsewhere, are invited to attend a gathering at two o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the YMCA-YWCA Community Center.

The brides also are invited to bring their mothers-in-law if they wish. The meeting is held for the purpose of permitting them to become acquainted with one another.

LADIES OF ORIENT

Ladies of the Orient will meet August 4 at the home of Mrs. H. M. Davenport, 212 High Street. A picnic dinner will be served at one o'clock.

Recipe

APRICOT RECIPES:

Apricots and Cream: Peel and slice ripe, chilled apricots (you may prepare them ahead of time as they do not discolor), then serve with sugar and cream. The cream may curdle slightly, but this will not impair the delicate flavor.

Apricots and Custard Sauce: Serve sliced, peeled apricots with thin, well-chilled custard sauce. And for an extra-special dessert, top a slice of sponge or angel food cake with sliced apricots, and serve with custard sauce enlivened with a dash of Sherry or Port.

Apricot Shortcake: This vies for top honors with strawberry shortcake. Make a large, double-decker shortcake with enriched biscuit dough. Be generous with sweetened, sliced apricots between the layers. Many people prefer thin cream or custard sauce poured over the shortcake instead of whipped cream. When fresh fruit is not available, use home-canned apricots.

Apricot Cup: Slice peeled or unpeeled, firm, ripe apricots, sugar lightly, and cover with orange or pineapple juice to which a dash of Sherry or Port has been added.

Summer Special Salad: On a large plate, arrange chilled mounds of sliced apricots, whole strawberries, and diced cantaloupe. Serve with French dressing, or a favorite fruit salad dressing. Toasted French bread topped with melted cheese completes a luncheon. Fresh pineapple wedges or cottage cheese may be used with the salad, too.

Sweetened Apricot Pulp: Force halved and stoned ripe apricots through a sieve and sweeten with sugar, honey, or corn syrup. This pulp may be used as a sauce for ice cream and puddings.

Apricot Mousse: Fold 1 cup

GI Students Must Report Changes in 'Majors'

Even a change of major course within the same school or college by a veteran studying under the GI Bill or Public Law 16 requires approval of the Veterans Administration and should be requested immediately. Emmett F. McGraw, a representative in Eugene has warned.

Course changes call for different cost estimates and these necessitate new VA approvals, McGraw explained. Letters of request must state reasons for the changes, just the same as in requests for transfers to other schools.

Oregon's VA office now is able to handle these requests rapidly, but a last-month rush is feared before opening of school in the fall. A counseling service is available to all veterans applying for educational benefits, he added.

Studebaker Forced To Halt Production

SOUTH BEND, Ind.—(AP)—The Studebaker Automotive Company will be forced to halt production Monday of the 1947 Studebaker because of a strike in a parts plant, spokesman for the company said Saturday.

They refused to disclose where the supplier strike had occurred, but they said they believed it might be of short duration.
