Oakridge Faces Some Problems
 In the near future, Oakridge is about to become a city of 3,000-3,500 population. The big Pope-Talbot outfit has acquired a huge sustained yield unit of timber on the Upper Willamette and it will bring in perhaps 275 to 300 families. There will also come to Oakridge new stores, new businesses of many kinds to serve this additional population. Some statisticians figure that for every person employed in an industry you can multiply by six to take in the worker's family and the families of the people who follow "service trades" adjacent to the industry. It is safe to say the population of the Oakridge area will double.

That means headaches as well as blessings. It stands to reason that most of the new people will want to have homes in or adjacent to Oakridge. They will send their children to the excellent (for the present) Oakridge schools. More school housing will be needed. They will want good wide streets, not paved, perhaps, but with some kind of all year surface and enough oil to keep dust down. They will require water and power from Oakridge's municipal plants. They will need sewers and sewage disposal—if Oakridge is to be kept healthy. They will need adequate fire and police protection.

Oakridge has one of the most beautiful townsites in Oregon, back there on the not-too-steep slopes which rise from the river. Homes in Oakridge look up the Willamette canyon to the snowclad heights of Diamond Peak. There is a background of beautiful wooded ridges. Oakridge is on the magnificent Willamette highway, one of the main travel routes to California. There is reason to believe that Oakridge can have a very large tourist trade, as well as industry—if Oakridge can make Oakridge reasonably attractive as a stopping place. Oakridge has all the makings for an exceptionally prosperous and stable community, but—

It will require some careful planning and management. The services of Howard Buford, the planning consultant of the Eugene-Springfield area, are available to Oakridge because the county helps pay the bill. Mr. Buford's office is swamped with problems, but he always seems to be able to find room for one more. He can give sound advice on street and utility layouts, (which will save Oakridge money in maintenance costs over the years). But Oakridge will face some financial problems also and the great question:

"Shall we take the new mills and the new residential areas within city and school district boundaries, or shall we invite the same kind of fringe problems which plague so many cities?"

Oakridge can learn a good deal from Sweethome over in Linn County. Sweet-home jumped from 298 population in 1930 to 3,500 shortly after 1940. Sweethome got a city manager and did a remarkable job of meeting its problems, but it still has headaches. Oakridge faces this set of figures:

	Taxable Valuation	Tax Levy
City of Oakridge	$ 230,183	30.2
Oakridge School Dist.	2,562,711	24.9

These are last year's figures. Add in the county tax of 12.7 mills and Oakridge comes up with an aggregate tax of 67.8 mills. (Eugene's rate was just under 60 mills last year, will be 75.9; Springfield had 70 last year, will have 76). One mill of tax rate in the city of Oakridge brings only $230. One mill in the consolidated school district (which includes Westfir) brings $2500. Of course, the city of Oakridge cannot include as much territory as the school district, but—how big should Oakridge be to have the most efficient and practical unit? How can Oakridge devise a plan which is basically sound for this growth period and yet economical. Will the city government of Oakridge take a firm hand to set up zoning and building and street layout controls, or will it let real estate speculators run wild?

Mayor Charles Croner and his city council and all the people of Oakridge, and the newcomers have the difficult but interesting job of making Oakridge one of the healthiest, most attractive towns in Oregon. Somebody suggests that Oakridge can be "the Gem of the Cascades." Makings are there.

Tough Break on Dorena Dam
 For all those who live where rampaging Willamette floods can get at them, the postponement of bids on the $9,000,000 Dorena dam is a real blow. To be sure, the federal government is holding up a long list of public works, so that men and materials can be concentrated on home building which is the nation's No. 1 need, at present. And the delay on the Dorena job may be only for 30 days. That will not hurt too much on a job that will require three years to complete.

However, if there is any threat of indefinite delay, there should be vigorous protest because these floods in the Willamette valley can destroy homes faster than people can build them. The great hazard of the Willamette valley—as General Robbins has pointed out for years—is that one of those super-floods like '61 or '90 will hit us before the system of dams can be completed, no matter how fast construction is pushed.

Here is a summary of the flood control situation:

Cottage Grove and Fern Ridge are completed and although they are small they have already proved their efficiency.

Dorena is ready for contract, funds have been appropriated; if we had had the Dorena dam last January it would have saved enormous damage along the Coast Fork and relieved Glenwood and other areas materially.

Detroit on the North Santiam is ready for contract, funds appropriated and that is one of the big ones.

Meridian dam on the main Willamette—the most important unit in the entire program—has only a little over $1,000,000 for preliminary work.

McKenzie tributary dams are still in the survey stage.

Sweethome dam on the South Santiam is still in survey stage.

The big battle to get these dams completed and in operation is going to be the battle for APPROPRIATIONS. Long ago Congress authorized up to $75,000,000 for the system of dams, but authorization is only a gesture and formality of procedure. Year by year in Congress comes the struggle to get the necessary APPROPRIATION LEGISLATION. The Willamette valley is only one of many in the United States with flood troubles and the competition is rough.

Dorena is reasonably sure, in spite of delays. For us, the most important problem will be to get the millions needed for the Meridian dam. All of the others are important, but Meridian is the one which will give most protection to areas such as Springfield, Glenwood, Willakenzie, and the Santa Clara and River Road sections.

Elmer Maxey and other leaders have been indefatigable, but they need the support of the entire community. It is timely to review "where we stand" and realize how much remains to be accomplished.

George Jones to Wed Ex-Red Cross Worker August 15, in India

Of paramount interest in Eugene is the announcement that the marriage of Miss Antonia Greene of New York City to George Jones, son of Mr. and Mrs. Walter B. Jones of 971 West Broadway will take place August 15 or thereabouts, in India, where Mr. Jones is stationed as a news correspondent for the New York Times at New Delhi. A graduate of the University of Oregon and former Register-Guard employee, Mr. Jones won notice by his work as United Press war correspondent in the South Pacific.

Original plans were for the wedding to take place at the Methodist Church in Bombay, with reception at the Imperial Hotel there. Due to the political situation in India now, the bridegroom may not be able to leave his post at New Delhi and the ceremony may take place in the latter city, but will follow the same plan.

Bridesmaid for Miss Greene will be the girl photographer for Life Magazine; best man will be the correspondent for the London Express, an old friend of the bridegroom and fellow war correspondent in the Pacific. Another New York correspondent will give the bride away, in this "newspaper wedding."

Miss Greene is a Red Cross worker, a graduate of Hunter's College in New York City. She also served in the Pacific campaign during the war, but met her fiancé in New York, shortly before they both sailed to foreign assignments at the first of this year. She left for Germany just a few days before he sailed for India.

Their courtship has been conducted by correspondence—not inappropriate to his calling!

Full details of the marriage are expected soon by the bridegroom's family in Eugene, by cable.

EUGENE-BOUND BRIDES HAVE MEETING ON TRAIN. SPEAK FRENCH TOGETHER

En route to Eugene recently to join her husband, a young French bride from Paris, Mrs. Chester Rooks, was the object of much attention from fellow passengers because she could speak no word of English. Finally, some word about her reached the ears of a fellow-traveler at the opposite end of the railway car, according to other Eugeneans who were in the car. The second young woman, Mrs. Charles Powell, bride of a Fall Creek man, hurriedly came back and began vivacious speech with young Madame Rooks. She herself was half French, she remarked to other attentive travelers, although her home had been in Maine.

The two Lane County brides apparently had a satisfactory visit, which lasted until their train arrived. They exchanged addresses, and promised to see each other soon again.

BIBLE SCHOOL
 Our universe is based upon law which is inexorable, inviolable and infallible. Nature does not slip, stumble or miss. Her every movement is absolutely accurate, and perfectly certain as the rising of the sun or the precision of the stars. The chemical reactions of a garbage heap are as true as those of the apothecary's table. The law of gravitation operates as perfectly in the atom, as in the stars.
 The cosmic accuracies so plain in the physical universe, could not be less certain and perfect in the moral realm. These laws of life are not imposed by some arbitrary ruler of the universe, but are the very nature of life. And any departure from them is always disastrous. The ten commandments express the basic laws of the moral universe. The almighty God uttered them because they are the true facts of life. This is true of all of God's word. We are studying these things at the Salvation Army Hall every Thursday evening commencing at 7:30 August 15. Better plan to attend—Un denominational and nonsectarian.
