High Heels—Screwball Hats Safety Hazard Says Expert

By EDWARD ELLIS
United Press Staff Correspondent
CHICAGO—(AP)—The modern glamour girl is an accident and fire hazard, an expert at the 34th Annual Safety Congress says.
John M. Roche, a director of the National Safety Council, and other experts put the finger on Millady as they met to discuss safety measures to cut down accidents which kill one person in the United States every five minutes.
Roche said that when the modern woman gets decked out in high heels, jewelry, screwball hat and frilly clothes she is a walking one-woman accident hazard.
"One safety problem the safety engineer has been unable to solve is the problem of high heels," Roche said. "They are a definite hazard, and usually are built so high that women who wear them are walking downhill to accidents all the time but don't realize it. They lose their balance and fall and suffer sprained ankles or broken legs. If women wore low heels there would be fewer accidents."

Roche's secretary, Connie Holmstrom, 23, a blue-eyed blonde, said she was on the safe side. She wore wedgies to work.
"No, you aren't," Roche cautioned. "Wedgies are just high heels with ramps."

He said rings and bracelets the women wear cause accidents in factories, offices and homes. They catch in typewriters, machinery or moving objects and cause minor, sometimes serious, accidents.
"If women in offices and factories wore less jewelry they might not get a whistle but they might get a raise for more efficiency," he said.

He said the drooping veils and hats with plumes women are wearing easily catch fire.
He issued his warnings after Ned H. Dearborn, National Safety Council president, told the 500 delegates to the Congress that America is "immoral in the field of safety."

He said that in business and industry last year 11,500 persons were killed in accidents, while 1,700,000 others were injured. This year, he said, traffic accidents are expected to kill 34,000 persons.

More than 30,000 persons are killed each year in accidents in the home while more than 4,500,000 others are injured, he said. On the farm, 4,500 farmers are killed each year while at work.

University Grad Writes Book on Opinion Polls

Paul Delahay, Belgian chemist, has been appointed visiting research associate in chemistry in the University of Oregon this fall, and is expected to arrive on the campus about Nov. 1. He will do polarographic research in the department as an assistant to Dr. Pierre Van Rysselberghe.
Mr. Delahay received his engineering degree and Licencie in chemistry at the University of Brussels where he has studied since 1938, and is about to receive his doctoral degree in chemistry. He has worked in the Belgian university as an assistant in analytical chemistry and general chemistry for the past two years serving as assistant to Professor Paul Erilisse.
