UO Drama Students Learn About Puppets

University of Oregon drama and speech students were given a demonstration Monday afternoon of what can be done in serious theater by puppets. Martin and Olga Stevens, Indiana, have been on the road with their marionette show for 3 years. The demonstration was brought to the campus by the educational activities board.

The student audience saw one scene from Joan of Arc the way it looks to a regular audience, then saw wha' made the puppets walk, talk, and perform, behind curtains. Stevens furnished the speaking voice for 14 of the actors and his wife for three. He said that in some performances they each take more than 15 parts. One of their regular productions is the famed "Passion Play" of old-world tradition.

The entire production goes into their sedan "actors," stage effects, costumes and lighting equipment. Stevens pointed out that they usually prefer a small theater, about 1500 capacity because their "actors" are only one ninth the size of regular human performers. Joan of Arc, in puppet form, stood about 18 inches high.

FLAXTEX RUGS AND CARPETING

Unlike many so-called linen rugs, Flaxtex Rugs are made without filler of any kind—they're all fine flax, grown under ideal conditions along the evergreen Willamette Valley of Oregon where flax is at its best—strong, clean soft and even after spinning and weaving, the flax fibers still average three inches or more in length.
For these reasons, and others, these linen rugs are unsurpassed as a material for floor covering—that's why Flaxtex all-linen rugs and carpets are smart and sensible for modern homes and institutions.
