New 'Copter Ordered For Portland Daily

PORTLAND (AP)—The Oregon Journal, whose assistant publisher was killed in the newspaper's helicopter last month, said this week it would go on using a helicopter to cover the news.

The paper ordered a new helicopter Saturday, and said the new craft would go into service about March 1. It will be operated from the roof of the Journal's new downtown building.

C. Sam Jackson, 33, assistant publisher and grandson of the paper's founder, crashed Dec. 31 in the helicopter whose use in news coverage he had pioneered. A friend whom Jackson was piloting, Ambros A. Cronin Jr., was also killed.

Ships first were introduced into America in 1609, being brought to Virginia from England.
