The U. S. Navy has one heavy aircraft carrier and two battleships afloat today—and that's all. They are the U. S. S. Midway, top, and the battleships Iowa and Missouri, center. The Midway's two sister ships, the Franklin D. Roosevelt and the Coral Sea, are in drydock—one for overhaul, the other uncompleted. Two other battleships were recently laid up in the 2400-ship "mothball fleet" for lack of manpower. Chart above compares Navy's present and wartime strength in ships, planes and enlisted personnel.
