

Council Okays Rezoning Bids Despite Board

Recommendations that two rezoning applications be rejected by the city council Monday night. The cases to be decided in light of the new comprehensive rezoning ordinance, the petitions were referred to the city attorney to be prepared into ordinances and scheduled for the date for public hearings on changes they would bring.

The planning body meeting after this month had decided that Charles A. Dickinson's request to have residential property rezoned for a neighborhood store at 2260 Eighteenth Ave. W. The board heard the proposition and in a letter from the board School District No. 4 which planned its new Westmoreland school just across the street from Dickinson's property.

Another objection was entered by a representative of the West-land Improvement Assn., claiming that the neighborhood did not need a community grocery, but that the location opposite the school would be detrimental to public investment in the school.

Monday night, however, Dickinson came to the council meeting with about a dozen neighbors who stood up and were counted when Earl McNutt asked how many in the room favored his zoning request.

Dickinson and his friends told the council that their nearest grocery now is more than a mile away. The prospective grocer also explained to the council that the city limits run only a few hundred feet away and that "anyone can set up a store just that far from where my lot is located."

After the council ordered that preliminary steps be taken to amend Dickinson's petition and ordered the public hearings at its next meeting the petitioner then said he should bring his friends to that session, too. But his query went unanswered.

The Newbury case was settled when the petitioner informed the council that it was her plan to build a residence between the lot she asked to be rezoned and other existing residences on the street. This new home, she said, would be the buffer between the light industrial section on Seventh and the Eighth Ave. residential area.

Use of another adjacent lot

TO LIVE OR NOT TO LIVE? That's a question being discussed by Eugeneans over this mammoth walnut tree which has existed through early Eugene history. Time, and a Richfield Oil Co. service station have caught up with the location of the sturdy giant and it appears destined for stove wood, as many another Eugene tree. A previous owner, Stanley Stevenson, feared the heavy, perhaps weary limbs, but opinion of neighbors spared the death warrant. Stevenson now lives at Vida. (Wiltshire engraving).

Steak Juggling Lady Proves Heroine of Democrat Show

PHILADELPHIA—(AP)—This is about a raw steak, held aloft in the dainty hands of a lady wearing diamonds.

The Democrats are feeling a little stronger Tuesday because of this steak, plus some salty oratory and 28 minutes of strenuous exercise in the steam room.

Of course, they still lack a presidential candidate who will be acceptable to all sections of the party. But they may have found the nominee for Vice-President, of whom more will be said here.

First of all, the steak. It was a real one, a medium-sized sirloin, raw, red, limp and damp. It was introduced in evidence, so to speak, by Mrs. India Edwards, chairman of the women's division of the national committee.

Mrs. Edwards told her audience how much she had paid for it. Then she put it down on the rostrum beside her. Because of the slant in the rostrum, the steak began to creep downhill until it was dripping partly over the edge.

Photogenic She retrieved it, to the delight of the photographers who asked her to hold it up again "for just one more" Mrs. Edwards complied.

Mrs. Edwards' steak and the rolling periods of Senator Alben W. Barkley's keynote speech, delivered just before, put the Democrats in a mood they have not known since the convention began.

Jews Capture Water Point

TEL AVIV—(AP)—Jewish forces Tuesday captured Ras El Ain, site of a big pumping station controlling the main water supply of Jerusalem.

Israeli armored forces, waging an offensive on a broad arc before Tel Aviv, seized Ras El Ain in a swift thrust from nearby Majdal Yaba, which they captured Monday.

Iraqi troops who had garrisoned Ras El Ain were reported to have put it to the torch in evident fear of being trapped by the Jewish forces fanning through the countryside.

With the pumping station and its terminus of the Jerusalem pipeline back in Jewish hands, authorities hoped to be able to restore the water supply for the more than 100,000 Jews in the Holy City.

In Jerusalem itself, one of the fiercest artillery and mortar duels of the war was reported developing. The shelling began before dawn, an Amman dispatch reported.

The sudden flareup of fighting in Jerusalem saw the Jews hurling scores of big new mortars into the old city which the Arabs seized before the truce. The Arab Legion replied with 25-pounders.

Arab reports by way of Amman said the Arab position had improved in the last 24 hours, with the Legion waging strong counterattacks in the Lydda area and regaining some ground.

The Arab league political committee was scheduled to meet at Amman Tuesday. Abdul Rahman Azzam Pasha, the secretary general, conferred at length with King Abdullah. The league was believed to be getting set to answer at once any United Nations Security Council proposals made at Lake Success.

Jaycees Thank Their Public

The Eugene Junior Chamber of Commerce has adopted a resolution expressing thanks to the people of Eugene and to the city's businessmen for their cooperation in the recent "Clean up, Fix up" campaign.

Jaycee President John Luvaas Tuesday reported that the resolution was passed at a meeting last week and included special commendation for City Manager Deane Seeger and Fire Chief E. L. Surfus.

Surfus also figured in the evening's activities when he was requested to attend and be sworn in as a member. Luvaas reported that the organization was "surprised" later to find that the fire chief was over age.

"We had to kick him out again," Luvaas said, "but then the Ex-hausted Roosters (formally, the associated members of the junior chamber) called a special meeting and took him immediately in to their flock."

In a more serious vein, Luvaas explained that the Jaycees' action in honoring the chief was prompted recognition of his cooperative attitude in working with them on community improvement projects.
