By H. F. "MAC" McDANIEL Major General Craigie, director of Air Force research, claims we ought to give more publicity to our new weapons and military developments. The General thinks secrets are fine, but they're apt to be as misleading as a Malayan road sign. If you go around acting as though you have nothing worse than a bean-shooter for your defense someone may get a notion to try to take your wallet away from you. If you have muscles, a judicious showing from time to time will make any interested aggressors think twice before they start trying to push you around. Sounds like the General's got a point that's sharper than a brass tack.

I see petitions are being circulated for new city commissioners and mayor. Now is the time to do some thinking on who we want in these offices, and work for them. After they are elected it is too late to holler.
