Morse Family

brand-new personality. Her year was distinguished by growth—she has accomplished seven inches in two years, most of this in the past year. She is excited about entering junior high school in the fall, and she is practicing piano faithfully. She ripples into "Fur Elise," the recital solo, as relaxation from Czerny and Thompson exercises.

For Mrs. Morse, life has been lived as usual. She is taking Spanish lessons, as one outside interest. Social life in the capital has been revived now to the extent that men again wear full formal dress at White House functions. During the war, and for some time afterward, tuxedos were the rule. Most colorful affairs have been the diplomatic reception, attended by ambassadors and their wives, the former in full regalia, and the reception to the armed forces, with its many uniforms. The senator is on the Armed Services Committee.

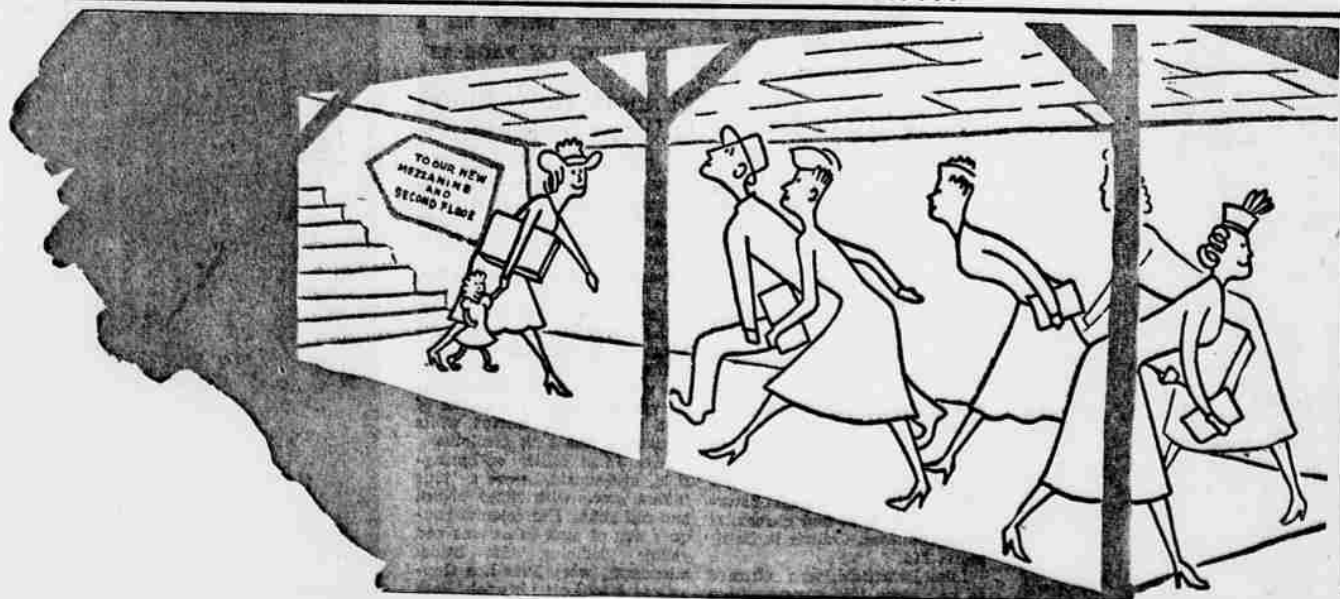

For Senator Morse, purchase of a farm by one of his close friends (Owen Scott, editor of United States News) who knows nothing of farming, has provided him with vicarious enjoyment of agricultural pursuit. He has got in a lot of riding on week ends, and of course was delighted with the record of "Spice," his favorite horse. He will be at home very little, planning a tour of the state when he returns from Washington.

Mrs. Morse reiterates her intention of making the weeks at home a time of real rest. Also, she is making the most of an opportunity to give the girls first-hand instruction in practical housekeeping. During the winter they are too busy with school, she says. The girls said nothing about the housekeeping plans, but for one task they showed great willingness—the care of Lexi, the kitten, who goes from lap to lap and shoulder to shoulder.
