"To the power tactics of Russia we do not oppose the values of democracy. Instead we talk of a preventive war. We establish a seventy-group air force. We discuss universal military training. The navy plans 65,000 ton carriers. We divert workers and materials needed for housing, pipe lines and freight cars to production of munitions. We put our faith in the atomic bomb, refusing to admit that Russia, too, not only can make and use the bomb but also use it with more devastating effect on our urban society.

"Our answer to force is not in technology," continues chancellor Hutchins, "it is in the values of democracy. Our greatest hope of peace is through the fullest realization of those values. As Mr. Molotov has suggested, the way to peace is through the peaceful competition of social systems. Sincere or not, Mr. Molotov is right.

"If we realize the possibilities of our social system, we need have no fear of competition with another."

CARE OF ELECTRIC PADS SUGGESTED

An electric pad should offer safe as well as soothing heat for the protection of the user.

A fully waterproof covering for the electric unit of the pad is the safest type. This may be of rubber or of an equally tough, durable and waterproof material which is securely sealed (usually vulcanized) along the seams. The covering should be inspected regularly for any sign of cracking from age or accidental punctures.

The waterproof covering may be protected by a removable outer cover of heavy-grade blanket felt or a washable fabric, or both.

Another feature recommended for safety is the use of two or more thermostats connected in series to provide effective control of heat in the event one thermostat fails.

Pads should be flexible so that they may be wrapped around an aching arm or leg. However, they should not be subjected to an undue amount of bending—for example, always store them flat in a box, never folded.

Pre-Cooking Stops Spoilage

With the urgent demand of the American people for pre-roasted fowl that can be heated and served quickly, various methods have been studied to retain good flavor and at the same time extend the keeping quality of the meat.

As a result of this food research, pre-roasted fowl can now be prepared so that it resists deterioration even when stored for several days at room temperature.

The superior keeping qualities result from filling the central hollow space of the roasted bird with a thermoplastic edible gel, which contains certain chemical preservatives.

John Zublin, of California, recently explained that spoilage of pre-roasted fowl normally begins on the interior walls of the bird surrounding the central space from which the organs have been removed. The outer skin of a properly roasted fowl is somewhat sealed from the roasting or broiling process and affords a more or less natural coating that is quite resistant to air contamination, he points out.

By filling the interior of the bird with a substance containing meat juices, gelatin, cooked grated vegetables, appropriate seasonings and small additions of certain chemical preservatives, the keeping quality of the meat is greatly extended.

1 teaspoon curry powder
1 teaspoon kitchen bouquet

Documentary Film Of French School Released Here

Under the sponsorship of the American Nurses' Association, a documentary film on the Florence Nightingale School at Bordeaux, France, is now being shown to hospital and nursing groups throughout the United States, according to Ella Best, ANA executive secretary.

The film, given a "sneak preview" at the Biennial Nursing Convention in Chicago, had its official premier in New York.

The documentary, entitled "L'Ecole Florence Nightingale," was originally produced to stimulate interest in the restoration of the school, severely damaged during the Nazi occupation of Bordeaux. Since 1918 American nurses have contributed quantities of equipment and over $123,000 in cash to the maintenance of the school, Miss Best declared.

The history of the nursing school goes back to 1801, when the half-French, half-Scottish Dr. Anna Hamilton, a disciple of Florence Nightingale, became director of the Hospital de Sainte-Protesante, Bordeaux, and immediately set about training nurses for the hospital in the Nightingale system.

A "living memorial," the school has been turning out a yearly average of 200 graduate nurses, who are in demand as "hygienic missionaries" all over Europe, Miss Best declared.

Housewives' Skill To Undergo Test

Homemakers from all sections of Oregon will test their cooking and sewing skills at the Oregon State Fair in Salem, September 6-12. Premiums in the combined division have been tripled, and a record number of entries in all classes is expected.

Entries do not close until September 4, and Manager Leo Spitzbart has invited all interested persons to write for premium lists from the Oregon State Fair in Salem.

The two divisions of competition will be under the supervision of Anne Hunt McKennon, well-known Oregon home demonstrator. Household articles will be offered as prizes, along with cash awards. Top award will be a new refrigerator to be given to the Oregon woman compiling the most points in the combined competition.
