

Fishing Sisters Growing Old Together in Georgian Town

MONTEZUMA, Ga.—(AP)—Most women in their eighties would sit down and let the world pass them by.

Two Montezuma women, aged 81 and 84, sit down. But the world doesn't pass them by, although an occasional fish might.

Charlotte Broyles Blaylock, the "youngster," and Neale (Mrs. T. W.) Brown are the fishermen. And they mix poetry with it.

for the thrill of it, they drum up some hectic domino duels. But when it comes to recreation, they just bait up the old hook and take off to the nearest fishing hole.

Mrs. Brown has a liver-covered pond. Sometimes they fish there. On other occasions they trek to Chickamauga Lake. Occasionally, they even get down to Florida, fishing in inland waters or in the gulf.

When they're farther south, it's high-falutin' tackle for the matriarch. But in Georgia, it's plain worm, wasp-grub and minnow.

The sisters grew up in the mountain country. Mrs. Blaylock was born of a father who took hunting as his hobby. She shadowed him, acquiring the habit then.

"I guess I'll never outgrow it," she says.

Good Catches

And every now and then the sisters come up with some good-sized catches. Mrs. Blaylock hooked a 14-pound grouper and 15-pound garfish in Florida. Mrs. Brown landed a six-pound redfish.

The "children" are getting used to coming home and reading poetic little notes like this: "With hooks and lines and can of bait. Now, don't wait supper, we may be late. Off we go in pretty weather, down the hill to the pool together."
