Catholic Information

Do Catholics Have to Say the Rosary?

"If I were a Catholic," a lady asked a priest, "would I have to say the Rosary?" "No," was the reply, "but you would say it because you would want to."

If you were a Catholic, dear reader, you would not have to go to Mass on First Fridays, or numerous fast days—you would not have to confess your sins, or go to Holy Communion more than once a year—you would not have to pray to the saints or for the souls in Purgatory—you would not have to light candles or kneel before statues and pictures. You would not have to use Holy Water or wear medals.

But if you were a sincere, practical Catholic, you would do all these and many other uncommanded things, because you would understand them—you would appreciate them—you would want to do them.

Do not judge Catholics by what they do, unless you thoroughly understand what is back of it all. Do not judge the Church by so-called Catholics who fail to follow their Faith. Do not judge any institution by information supplied by the enemies of that institution. As the Bible says: "Judge not, lest ye be judged."

If it's anything Catholic, ask a Catholic! For information on any Catholic subject write to—Knights of Columbus, Box 211, Eugene, Oregon.
