Jury Continues DuPont Query

CHICAGO —(AP)— A federal grand jury which is conducting an anti-trust investigation of the huge Du Pont industrial empire, Friday widened its inquiry to include more than 60 companies.

The government is attempting to determine if any tie-up exists between E. I. Du Pont de Nemours & Co., and many other industrial firms.

Director Appears

Lammot Du Pont, director of the vast Du Pont empire, appeared before the grand jury Friday for the second time. He spent several hours in the jury room Thursday.

Subpoenas issued by the grand jury for records of E. I. Du Pont de Nemours and Co., Wilmington, Del.; Remington Arms Co., Inc., Bridgeport, Conn.; and Kinetic Chemicals, Inc., Wilmington, Del., disclosed the government's interest in other companies and their possible affiliation with Du Pont.

Soil 'Growth' Gives Large Crop Yields

CEDAR LAKE, Ind. —(U.P.)— Henry Huppenthal said this week he has the most fantastic farm on earth.

It's an agricultural phenomenon, he said, a place where 25,000 square yards of earth have bulged up 15 feet higher than the surrounding land.

Huppenthal has been watching his farm "grow" for years until now it has reached startling proportions.

Churning Loam

The farmer has called in soil experts to study the rich, black loam that churns up from the depths of the earth to pile itself up atop his hard clay.

He said that earlier he consulted geologists who told him that an underground stream apparently was pushing the rich bottom soil upward.

Earth Eruption

But Huppenthal prefers to believe that the phenomenon is "an eruption of the earth's core."

Whatever it is, he said, it's all right with him. The soil, is so productive that it produced more than 119 bushels of corn to the acre this year.

Once, Huppenthal said, he tried to grow oats in the rich loam, but the experiment was a failure. The yield was so heavy that the stems of the crop collapsed under the weight.

Huppenthal said chemical analysis of the raised earth showed that it is silt loam with an "excellent" content of nitrogen, phosphorous and hydrogen. It is also free of insect matter.

National Geographic Features Paintings

The December edition of the National Geographic Magazine has an article and 23 color plates of paintings from the Kaiser Friedrich collection in Berlin which will soon be exhibited in the Portland Art Museum.

The colection of 96 world famous paintings, insured for $60,000,000 has been brought to the Northwest to be shown exclusively in Portland through the influence of Senator Wayne L. Morse.

TACOMA, Wash. — (U.P.) — Ruth Paul reported to police that a burglar displayed signs of a guilty conscience even before he had completed his visit to her house. The prowler took his time, raiding the icebox, exchanging a clean pair of socks for his own and taking other items. When Ruth discovered the theft she also noticed a picture of her brother on the wall had been turned around. Her brother is a police officer.

UNCLE TO RESCUE

MEMPHIS, Tenn. —(U.P.)— Gardner Scott cried when he tried on a pair of shoes and couldn't get them off. To help at the police station, officer Edward O'Connor uncle had the key.
