Economist Calls ERP 'Fruitful'

By Jim Welch

"The Marshall Plan is one of the most fruitful investments we have ever made," Calvin B. Hoover said Monday night.

"If the cold war can be kept cold," he said, "the European Recovery Plan can complete its destined job."

Hoover, head of the department of economics at Duke University and a member of the President's Committee on Foreign Aid—the group which planned and executed the recovery program—spoke at the University of Oregon on the theme: "Beyond the Marshall Plan."

He declared that the foremost aim of the recovery plan is to resist Soviet expansion in Western Europe and that this is to be furthered by aiding Marshall Plan countries in achieving economic stability and thereby, political stability.

"We have succeeded in this beyond all expectation so far," he said.

He pointed out that on the average, agricultural production in Europe now is 95 per cent of the 1938 level and that industrial production averages 120 per cent of that year's level. He reminded his listeners that population, too, has taken a jump in Western Europe as a result of migration from Iron Curtain countries.

He warned that these figures may place a false light of success upon the situation as these countries are now finding their markets for production dwindling as the United States changes from a country of shortages to one of surpluses.

The present British "dollar crisis" is the most outstanding illustration of this condition, he said.

autos here but that recently we have almost filled all back lists and now no one wants the over-priced and not-too-well-adapted British models.

Trade Agreements
This all points toward a system of restrictive reciprocal trade agreements between Western European countries and other countries besides the U. S. Hoover continued. The trend is already established, he said, as he singled out Britain's trade pact of several months ago with Argentina and her recent agreement with Russia to procure wheat.

"Only by the continuance and furtherance of these special trade agreements can Western Europe achieve any moderate level of economic stability, and only by this method will the U. S. eventually be able to discontinue her subsidies to Europe," he concluded.

Dean of Girls Named For Willamette High

BETHEL—Mrs. Ruby Gudard, McKenzie, High School teacher during the past year, has been appointed dean of girls and librarian at the new Willamette High School, according to Tom Powers, superintendent of Bethel schools.

Mrs. Gudard is now preparing a large number of books for school opening in September.

Powers also reported that Mrs. Leland Wilson will teach the second grade at Bethel School this year. Her husband is the new grade school principal at Danebo School, and formerly taught at Oakridge elementary school. He is now attending summer school at Oregon College of Education.

Hearing Aid Sought by Friend blind" was received by the Register-Guard Tuesday from an address on Arthur Street in Eugene.

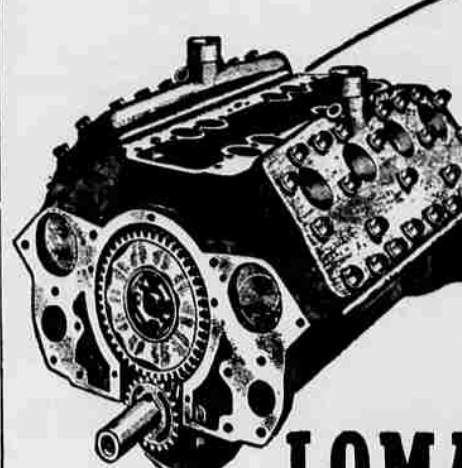

The writer, who chose to supply only her initials and street address, said she had read the re-

The address is Box 1140, Arthur St., and the lady's initials are Mrs. E. A. R.
