

Radio 'Diviner' Unearths Metals And Even Lost Persons, He Says

By Rene Balbaud
United Press Staff Correspondent
PARIS — (AP) — Jules Calte, a radio diviner, and an inventor, Andre Coatrieux, claim they have perfected a process for discovering metals and even lost persons with the help of mysterious "radio waves."

Using Calte's divining properties, which are "controlled" by a kind of Geiger counter invented by Coatrieux, the pair claim to have helped Paris police discover a body last March.

Police, they said, had given up all hope after a vain search of two months, but the team, using the machine, which works by short waves, found the body without any trouble.

"Every metal and every person, living or dead, sends out short waves of different lengths," Coatrieux said.

"Personal wave lengths are as individual as fingerprints. The only problem is to know how to receive them. We have not solved this problem," he said.

Coatrieux said the pair worked together to find water and metals, rather than bodies.

How It Works
"Here is how we work," he said. "We limit the region of our search through the efforts of Calte, using a ring or watch. Then, with my electric counter, which has an antenna and earphones, I wait for an interruption of the low hum which shows the presence of the object. Each metal, gold, silver, copper, must have a special machine keyed to its waves."

He said he thought once he had struck gold, but on digging, found a body with gold teeth.

In looking for water, he said, the low buzz was interrupted by a zzzeee sound like a mosquito if there was water, and a whistling sound if he was near a cave without water.

Coatrieux said his process was very similar to radar.

"Eventually I hope to develop it for diagnosing disease," he said. "We surely can invent a machine keyed to the waves of microbes or cancerous cells, for example."

Tricky Safe Invented
Calte and Coatrieux already have invented a practical application of "personalized waves."

They have constructed a safe which opens automatically by a counter device when the owner approaches it. The owner wears a "sending apparatus" on his arm, keyed to his own personal wave length, and nobody else can open the safe.

And if the person dies? "One would have to blow the safe up," Coatrieux said.

Coatrieux, who works with scientific X-ray, radio and television equipment for a living, said he and Calte were planning a trip through France's Vendee region this summer.

"During the battle between French Royalists and the Bretons in 1795, Royalists were rumored to have used bullets made of gold and silver," he said. "They also were supposed to have gold medals for identity. We also think there may be some gold veins there, but very slight. Our trip should prove very interesting."
