

Expedition, Safely in Turkey, Determined to Find Noah's Ark

months of each year and it is preserved as in a refrigerator." Some of the peasant reports have described it as being petrified, so hard they cannot hack pieces off it with their hunting knives.

To Take Pictures
The expedition consists of Smith, as leader; Walter Wood, Sea Cliff, Long Island, mechanical engineer, in charge of transport for the trip; E. J. Newton, Colfax, N. C., photographer, and Weldon Ogg, health physicist from Knoxville, Tenn.

Newton will be charged with taking pictures to prove the Ark's existence to the world.

As equipment, a jeep and trailer, together with tents, camping equipment and mountain climbing equipment is en route via ship. The group arrived by air, ahead of their jeep.

Smith said he was prepared to stay in Turkey until he finds the object of his search, but indicated his funds were limited.

Smith also said he hoped the Russians would not cause any trouble. When news of the planned expedition began circulating several months ago, the Russian radio broadcast a charge that the expedition was a thinly disguised "spy expedition."

Smith said: "I'm not interested in anything on the Russian side of the border. All I want to do is to find the Ark. I hope the Russians will co-operate by not causing me any more trouble."

Atomic Power Said in Infancy

RICHLAND, Wash. — (AP) — Famed atomic physicist Dr. Karl T. Compton compares the present development of atomic energy to that of steam power when "Watt first noticed the lid of the kettle bumping up and down."

Dr. Compton is heading a party of the Research and Development Board of the National Military Establishment on an inspection tour of the Hanford works here.

On hand for the four-day tour were scientists, industrialists, and military personnel. They were to confer with key officials at the plutonium plant.

Plants First Goal
"Although atomic power is only seven years old, it will be much more rapidly developed than steam power or other methods," Dr. Compton said. "The immediate goal ahead is development of small efficient power plants which can use atomic power economically."

The former president of Massachusetts Institute of Technology said the intense concentration on atomic power in the U.S. is due to the fact that twice as much power per capita is used here than in any other nation on earth.

"This source of power will not deteriorate with time," he said. "It is a million times more productive of power than coal. It will be usable a thousand years from now for either war or peace."

Civilian members of the inspection party are William Webster, chairman of the Research Board's Committee on Atomic Energy; Dr. G. T. Felbeck vice-president of the Carbide Chemical Corp.; Dr. Robert Rinehard, executive secretary of the board; H. A. Winne, vice president of General Electric, and W. H. Hosford, retired vice president of Western Electric.
