

Final of Damage Suit Set by Circuit Court Ruling

Judge G. F. Skipworth, after denying one motion for a new trial and granting the other two cases where plaintiffs remained unconvinced, ruled that the case should not disturb the verdict of $2000 in the case of Flossie, the plaintiff, and held that the verdict of $2000 against Stabileman Clark & Lamb, who had rented the horse that proved unmanageable. The horse was killed in an auto accident in which Lambert was injured.

A jury had said that Lambert was free of contributory fault, and that Fairbanks was negligent in hiring out a horse with a known (or should be known) propensity for mischief.

But in the case where Catherine M. David had sued and recovered $2224 in damages from Newberry's store, the court decided that there was sufficient ground for a new trial because of error in instructing the jury. The court said that it was error to omit instructions on contributory negligence in two instances, even though the court had covered contributory negligence in its general instructions to the jury.

Evans had argued that the court should set aside the verdict and enter a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, claiming that the plaintiff had failed to state a cause of action. The court denied the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, and granted a new trial.

In the Newberry case, the plaintiff claimed that the store was negligent in maintaining a raised platform some four inches off the floor with a one-inch overhang. She fell and suffered injury when shopping and contended that the structural nature of the platform caused the fall.

The store contended that it had maintained the platform in the same manner for some four years, without anyone falling over it, and that the plaintiff must have been contributorily negligent.

A jury, however, decided the store owed the plaintiff $2224, and it was this verdict that the store moved to have set aside.
