

Lions Club Learn of Orchid Raising

Chase acquainted members of the Lions Club with some of the joys of raising orchids in the Wednesday noon session at the Eugene Hotel.

Only during the last 50 years have orchids been reproduced under hothouse conditions, Chase said. He said that the Chase Gardens has been producing orchids for the past eight or ten years. He said that the Chase Gardens has been producing orchids for the past eight or ten years.

Not Rare Flower
Contrary to popular belief, the orchid is not a rare flower. There are many different kinds, growing in many different climates. Chase said that it is probably the most widespread of any flower.

The large, most popular type comes from Central and South America—with Venezuela one of the largest exporters.

It takes about six or seven years to produce a hybrid variety at Chase Gardens. The plants are propagated by two methods—seedling and vegetating. The latter method, which consists of cutting off portions of a mature plant, is slower and not preferred.

Many Varieties
Since orchids bloom, only once a year, Chase Gardens produces many different varieties, with different blooming months. This way there is a steady supply of flowers throughout the year. White is rapidly becoming one of the most popular colors, Chase said.

The orchids are developed in moss, no soil being necessary for their growth. Delicate flowers that they are, they exist mostly on air and water, Chase explained.

Newlywed, 89, Waltzes Bride At Reception

He observed that since he is married he'll have to slow down. Instead of four or five dance nights a week, Trambly allows as how he might make it two or three a week.

Trambly and Mary Delgard, 68, were married and then were joined by scores of friends and relatives at a ballroom here for the wedding dance.

He met his bride at a dance two years ago. He has been a widower for 19 years.

Moon Drafted to Play Role in Stage Show

SWANZEY, N. H. — (AP) — The moon had a role in a play presented here.

In one scene of Denman Thompson's "The Old Homestead," which is presented annually in the outdoor Potash Bowl, the moon is out. In the old days, a painted moon was used on the stage set.

But this year, as an added touch of realism, the play was timed so that the actual moon rose over the scene at just the proper moment.

Headaches Plaguing Russia Described to Exchange Club

The headaches that are current-war for three main reasons, as detailed by Dr. Fisher—they are too occupied with internal development; they have problems in their attempts to socialize satellite countries; and they have become fully conscious of the growing external opposition to Soviet expansion plans.

Since 1917, the Russians have been concerned with a program of industrializing the country, through a series of five-year plans. The present one, started in 1945, aims at restoring Soviet production to the level of 1940.

Good Progress
Present indications are that they are making good progress towards this goal, Dr. Fisher said, but in the meantime the U. S. has gone far beyond the 1940 level. War cannot be considered if this industrial aim is to be achieved.

Leaders in satellite countries are objecting to the farm collectivization policy that Moscow is trying to enforce. The program has been meeting much opposition in Yugoslavia, Poland and Bulgaria. In addition, the Catholic Church is becoming an important factor in the fight against spreading communism.

Outside Pressure
Russia is exemplified by such important doctrines as the Truman Doctrine, the Marshall Plan and more recently the Atlantic Pact. These have had far reaching effect on slowing up Soviet ambitions.

However, Dr. Fisher voiced a plea for constructive plans on the part of the Western Powers, because Russia cannot be expected to fall by the mere weight of its own headaches. We need a positive approach in this cold war.

Suspect Helps Police Search for Himself

NEWPORT, R. I. — (AP) — Anthony Silvia had the novel experience of helping police search for himself.

Silvia was walking home late at night when a police cruiser came along. The officers were looking for a prowler who had
