Neglected Fingernails Provide Breeding Spot For Threatening Germs

By ALICIA HART
NEA Staff Writer

Sounds awful—but do you know that with but a little bit of neglected dirt-embedded fingernails can provide a happy hunting ground for germs?

Manicurists report—in astonishment—that many women who demand impeccable manicures bring nails to the table which reveal gross neglect when polish is stripped.

Polish-concealed grime is a menace to health as well as to good grooming. Fingernails are in almost constant contact with the face and are a threat because the mouth, nose, eyes are portals of germ entry.

Moreover, minute deposits of face and deodorant cream, face-powder, pigmented foundations, mascara and eye shadow, which lodge under nails, are an impingement of good grooming, no matter how impeccable the manicure is.

For health's sake, as well as for beauty, nails should be kept meticulously clean. Best way to make sure that they're simon pure is to scrub with a nail brush every time hands are washed. If any dirt resists the scrub, there should be a follow-up with a probing orange stick.

Juvenile Committee Meets Thursday Eve

Members of the juvenile detention home committee and other members of the public interested has been scheduled for 8 p. m. Thursday in Judge William East's courtroom at the Lane County courthouse.

A coordinator and coordinating committee will be appointed for the home. Recommendations on the project from John Schapps, consultant, member of the National Probation and Parole Assn., will be presented. Schapps visited here to investigate the project recently, and has sent his recommendations.

All persons interested will be welcome.

CLUB TO MEET
ALPINE—Mr. and Mrs. George Rhodes will entertain the Fort-nightly 500 Club at their home in Alpine, Saturday evening, September 24. This is the first meeting of this fall season.

Constant Exposure Dries Natural Oils In Lady's Hands

Because your hands are constantly exposed to the weather, to dusty chores, or to water, their skin is steadily robbed of its natural oil, says the August issue of Charm, "the magazine for the business girl." This oil must be replaced in order for the skin to maintain its smooth texture.

Massage your hands with cream or lotion before and after laundering, gardening and dusting. Wear loose gloves while you sleep, and let your hands absorb a supply of rich cream at night.

Use nail cream or cuticle oil on hangnails. When you remove harsh cuticle, approach the sensitive matrix—the moon—with caution, for it is here that nail injuries occur most easily.

Use only the shades of polish that you know will be complexion flatterer. Rosy reds and deep pinks emphasize the clarity of the skin; burnished red-browns enrich a tan. Use the more delicate pinks on nails which are exceptionally tiny. Be wary of the red-black shades. Outline moons and tips to make hands appear their most feminine. For an illusion of length, use polish over the entire nail.

Chen Yu Presents New Fall Colors

Chen Yu has brought out twelve new shades of nail lacquer to accent or harmonize with the range of fashion colors.

The firm's color research experts point to brown as the first and leading color for fall; next in importance is teal; then, deep hennas, rusts, coppery tones, browns, mossy greens and slate blues. Olive green and navy also look promising for autumn and early winter.

All of which means that there is no one nail lacquer shade which may be worn with all the new fashion colors expressed by the fabric designer and couturier. Rather, they say, you will choose from the twelve new Chen Yu shades.

With the hennas, rusts, tawny yellows and orange reds, you will like such lacquer shades as: Sea Shell, Coral Fan or Brown Coral, they suggest. For the terra cottas, rich browns, coppery tones, olive and moss greens, the vibrant reds are suggested: Sun Red, Chinese Red, Temple Fire or Dragon's Blood.

The navy blues, smoky greys, teals, plums and brighter garnets call for a blue-red: Lucky Devil, Firefly, Spring Fever, Flowering Plum or Pink Sapphire.

Dialers Deplore Teen-Agers Who Tie Up Telephone

By ALICIA HART
NEA Staff Writer

Some teen-agers spend their evenings glued to the family telephone as though that instrument had been specifically invented for their use.

The thoughtless girl's chit-chat that ties up the lines is a nuisance to her family as well as to purposeful callers who squirm under the never-ending busy signal.

Telephone Manners
The girl guilty of these faults needs to brush up on good telephone manners: Chain-calls are a number one violation of the rules. Etiquette requires that other members of the household be given a chance to make and break dates, speak to the doctor, lawyer or the grocer.

Coy time-wasters over the telephone should be saved for face-to-face encounters. Voice camouflaging, cory "Guess who this is?" routines are not only time-wasters but can be a threat to friendship.

It's practically impossible to be "cute" successfully over the phone. However, the "voice with the smile," intelligent, friendly and interested—will get a girl places.

"Friendly" Treatment
No girl should be miserly with this "friendly treatment." Her parents' friends and tradespeople will appreciate it, and she'll gain social poise and the ability to be at ease with all kinds of strangers. Finally! Since any girl hits the roof if her telephone messages are garbled or rendered unintelligible by the sister or brother who errs in that department, she should be considerate of other people's messages. Keeping pencil and memo paper handy by the telephone is one guarantee that a message will be written down accurately on the spot and that it has a better chance to be taken accurately and legibly.

WCS MEETING AT METHODIST CHURCH
Women's Society of Christian Service of First Methodist Church held its general meeting Tuesday afternoon, at one-fifteen o'clock. The Rev. Berlyn Farris, new Methodist minister, spoke on "The Year Before Us." Devotions were led by Mrs. Raynor Smith.

Preceding the regular meeting a prayer service was held in the church chapel. Women attending the prayer service took a sack luncheon.

Following the meeting, tea was served in the church parlor by Circle Four.

Frequent Use Helps Silver Preservation

It's a wonderful paradox that nothing preserves sterling silver like constant use, says the August issue of Charm, the magazine for the business girl. In the same way as do fine woods and real pearls, sterling silver develops a patina, a lovely luster, in the wear and handling.

Washing Important
Wash silver as soon after meals as possible, because there are some foods—notably eggs—which leave marks on flatware. Salt makes tiny black pits in silver, so brush your sterling salt shakers extra carefully after each meal. Don't rub them, or random salt grains may become imbedded. Line your sterling bonbon dishes with dummies before you use them to serve salted nuts.

Between meals, store silver in a wooden chest which is lined with nontarnish cloth. Or, line a drawer in your dining room sideboard or kitchen cabinet with a half-yard of nontarnish silver cloth. Simply place half the cloth in the drawer, arrange silver on it, and fold the remaining half over the silver. Charm advises.

Cloth Bags for Storing
To store hollow ware, buy some specially constructed cloth bags like pouches, with strings at the top. Or, make them yourself, from non-tarnish cloth. Just stitch a square bag in the proper size, make a hem at the top, and pull a drawstring through the hem.

As a final word of caution: Be sure to count your silverware before you put it away. For although you can't possibly wear out silver, you can very easily deposit a knife or fork in your disposal unit with the dinner scrapings.

no extra cost for upkeep. A promise of this good behavior for six months to skirts with knife pleats, box pleats or accordion pleats—is a written guarantee of California designer Stephanie Koret.

Well aware that a school girl can keep down the size and cost of her wardrobe with switchable units, this designer makes "separates" of pleated skirts and of tops that oblige all down the line from blouses to reefers.

Smart new blouse style that can be worn out like a middy or in like a shirt in Koret's new torso-fitting wool jersey. Striped spirally like a barber's pole in two-toned colors, such blouses were designed to be the gay upper half of pleated skirt fashions. Typical styling of those is seen in the solid color wool jersey skirt, knife-pleated to look as straight as a plumb line when static, as fluted as an unfurled fan when it goes into action.

Box-pleated skirts with creases that stay as sharp as a gent's freshly pressed pants flaunt their permanence in all-woolen clan plaids. These invite both crepe and jersey blouses and fleecy reefers as campus companions. Reefers in a choice of colors are made to look their jauntiest with hand-span pockets, slit openings and gold shank buttons.

New Plastic Capsule Works Like Magic

By Alicia Hart

A plastic capsule shaped like a nice fat olive puts on a traveler's-aid performance for this summer's gypsies which would make a magician turn green with envy.

Sealing in a variety of liquids to be used for removing nail polish, stopping a stocking run, erasing stains from clothing, or what-have-you, capsules are sandwiched in between two pads of gauze or flannel.

The opposite side of the small square gauze or flannel pad, which when given a squeeze breaks the capsule and saturates the material for instant application, is a heat-sealing fabric of matching size.

These liquid-filled capsule pads, which also provide the traveler with a skin lotion, a baby oil, various medicants and salves without adding the weight of bottles, cans, tubes or applicators to luggage, offer another advantage to the summer vacationer. She can dispose of her traveling aid after it's used and free her baggage of even the feather-light capsules which have seen her through her journey.

All that a lady-vacationer has to do, for example, when she discovers the spot of gravy that strayed to her suit is to reach in her bag for a capsule pad designed to make short shrift of this problem. She squeezes the traveler's aid marked "cleaning
