Credit Expert Tells Wholesalers How to Handle Sick Accounts

Edwin B. Moran, high official of the National Assn. of Credit Men, Tuesday night told local wholesalers that 7 out of 10 sick businesses could be saved with proper handling by creditors.

Speaking at a dinner meeting in the Eugene Hotel before some 70 members of the Cascade Assn. of Credit Men, Inc., a recently organized group of wholesalers in the community, Moran said creditors often were better off if they could stabilize a sick business rather than force bankruptcy.

"Records from our national association show we can iron out most problems causing financial weakness in a business and, thus, realize a dividend distribution that would not be otherwise possible."

Moran said the National Assn. of Credit Men was composed of 130 local associations located in all major markets of the United States. The organization, he said, provided many benefits to credit men.

"The national association conducts a fraud prevention program, brings pressure for new finance laws, issues monthly publications, conducts forums, and provides specialized service for all local members."

Moran said one of the most important objectives of the national group was to develop cooperation among credit men in fighting corrupt business practices. The association's fraud department, Moran explained, has secured numerous convictions in recent years.

Moran said fraud department records revealed that 50 per cent of the nation's crooked business failures occurred in New York, 40 per cent took place in the cities of Cleveland, Philadelphia and Chicago, and the remaining 10 per cent was spread throughout the rest of the country.

Moran was quick to point out, however, that the bulk of the "hot" merchandise from eastern business failures found its way to the Northwest. "Approximately 75 per cent of distressed merchandise from the east is dumped in Oregon, Washington, or Montana."

Moran told of a recent example of business fraud that was uncovered by the national association. "Our agents traced $110,000 worth of candy bars to a barn near Waco, Texas after four months work. Our men in cooperation with deputy sheriffs closed in and caught the crooks red-handed."

If the loot hadn't been recovered, Moran explained, the crooks would have unloaded it on the market at least 10 per cent below wholesale prices. This would have demoralized distributors in the Dallas-Waco area, he added.

Moran told local wholesalers that their recent application to join the national association was "virtually assured." The nationally-known authority in credit and financial circles high-lighted his one-hour speech with colored slides illustrating the numerous activities carried out by the national credit group.
