

Greek Army Ousts Guerrilla Troops

The United Nations special commission on Greece (UNSCOG) said Wednesday the Greek army has eliminated guerrilla resistance along the northern borders of the country.

The Greek general staff announced in Athens Tuesday night 13 Albanian soldiers who surrendered to Greek frontier guards reported that guerrilla leaders hoped to reenter Greece soon "with Russian aid."

Greece holds a temporary advantage at the frontier. The commission warned, however, of "increased gravity of the threat to peace" if Greece's Communist northern neighbors, Albania and Bulgaria, continue aiding guerrillas in defiance of U.N. Assembly resolutions.

The commission concentrated the weight of its criticism on Albania, asking the general assembly to find Albania "primarily responsible for the threat to peace in the Balkans."

Greece last week threatened to send her troops across the Albanian border unless that Soviet satellite stopped helping guerrillas. The Greek government said then it would notify the U. N. that it felt entitled to do so under article 51 of the United Nations Charter, which outlines measures a nation may take in self-defense.

The Greek action drew an adverse reaction in Moscow, which although it has no military alliance with Albania, regards itself as a protector of the satellite. The Soviet press warned that an invasion of Albania by Greece would have serious repercussions.

U. S. Secretary of State Dean Acheson and British Foreign Secretary Ernest Bevin also poured cold water on the Greek plan by announcing they could not go along with it.

The commission also recommended that the assembly again ask Albania and Bulgaria to stop aiding the Greek rebels and call on Albania, Bulgaria and Yugoslavia to cooperate "with an appropriate international body" for observation of whether the guerrillas who fled north had been disarmed and interned.

The Soviet satellites have refused from the beginning to cooperate with the U. N. commission and its observers.
